It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

i hate that trope of "you scientists might now all that scientific data about flowers or whatever but you don't appreciate its beauty" like i guarantee not only they do, not only in the common way but also in studying it which is not some cold emotionless endeavour and learning that stuff can be an appreciation of its beauty!!! but also they will find beauty in things you probably think are gross like worms and slime mold and stuff

Good morning it's now day 5 of black history month. Yesterday I decided to raise funds via gofund me for laser hair removal. If you can take the time out to read a little bit of my situation when it comes to facial hair. I will greatly appreciate you.

Just a lil back story. Growing up in my teen

Years it became a nightmare to see chin and upper lip hair grown. I was 16 and my life shattered. My dad's genes started to pick up. I was taking hormones on and off behind my parents back so whenever I went weeks without hormones hair would grow in dramatically and I'll would shave, nair, pluck and wax. I noticed shaving caused me huge texture acne problems, not only because of puberty but because I was on and off of hormones. I didn't realize this until I noticed how people would treat me now that my skin was bumpy everywhere. I decided to find a solution by talking to my doctor about prescribing a topical cream to put on the affected area of my face. It was my whole fave from the neck on up. Once I noticed results of the texture acne disappearing I made up a strict skin care routine. My skin clearing up was not only a dream but it was becoming my reality. I started taking hormones consistently which helped, skin care was amazing. When the pandemic hit i couldn't keep up with my strict regimen. By the looks of it my skin knew my regular activities that kept me active had completely died down. I started breaking out in certain areas which would trigger me to look back at my teen years and see folks laugh at me. I couldn't afford to get my waxed (which to me was the only solution, it didn't cause me to break out and my face loved it) Hrt and testosterone blockers had slowed down the growth of my hair dramatically. So the little hairs I had would be waxed away. As the pandemic became clear as day we can't break out quarantine. Hair started to grow in and it started to trigger me. I couldn't allow that to happen. I became obsessive yet again about the growth of this facial hair. So I started shaving again and that was biggest mistake I made. I noticed a dark shadow appeared it seemed more darker than usual. I think because of the lack of sunlight my skin was not as dark as it gets from being active in the sun. So any 5 o'clock shadow I had was more visible to me. It makes me dysphoric as hell, it makes me paranoid as fuck!! I had to go with the fact that I am a woman so I can't have facial hair. Only a select few knew about the insecurity I have when it comes to facial hair. It's honestly the pressure to conform which to me works for me. Not only because of choice but also I feel more comfortable and safe. Currently in 2021 I decided to go fully under treat to remove all traces of hair on my face. I think it's time to use something more long run. I looked on Groupon and I found an amazing place and deal. It was highly recommended by another trans woman to go there. The price for laser is $446.00 at the moment. If you know Groupon you know the prices jump and down. So I decided to raise $525.00 to go towards laser treatment. Gofund me does take a few out so I want to be as cautious as possible. All funds will go towards my laser treatment and if any funds left will go towards future needs.

Thank you for reading just a little bit about my journey to womanhood. If you're interested in donating and if tumblr is acting weird with the link feel free to click on my bio.

#Disney's #Frozen helps researchers solve a 62-Year-Old cold case

comicbook.com/movies/news/di...

Disney’s Frozen ended up helping some researchers solve a 62-year-old cold case. Some new findings in Communications Earth and Environment show how these people used technology from the Pixar film to solve the Dyatlov Pass incident. For those unaware, A team of students and their instructor went on a mountaineering expedition in the Ural Mountains in 1959. What followed was pretty horrific. Their tent was found after a snowstorm ripped open from the inside and there were bodies scattered all around the nearby areas with traumatic injuries. People wondered how this could have occurred with no witnesses, and soon conspiracy theories began to bubble up from all sides. However, everything changed when a present-day researcher watched Frozen for the first time.

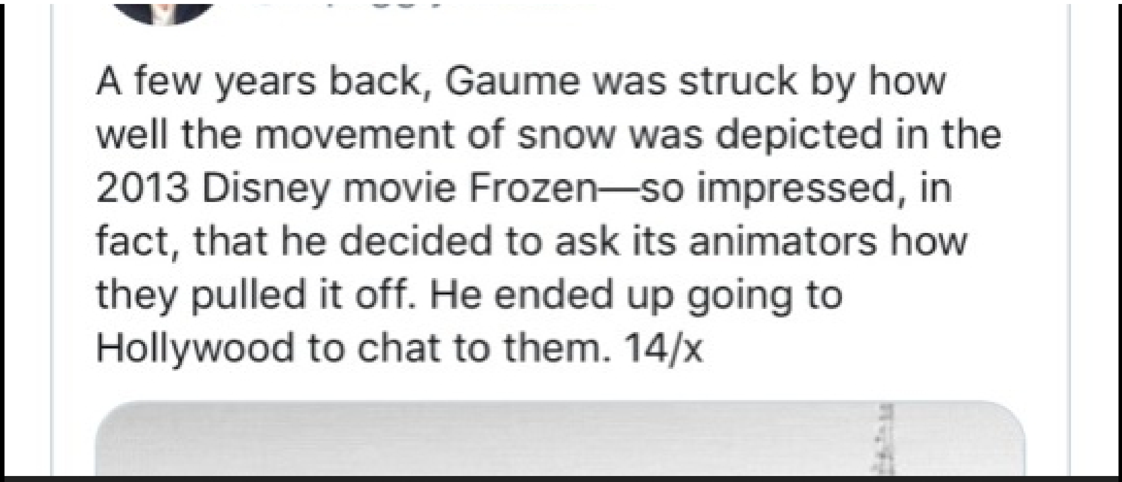
@SquigglyVolcano
Replying to @SquigglyVolcano

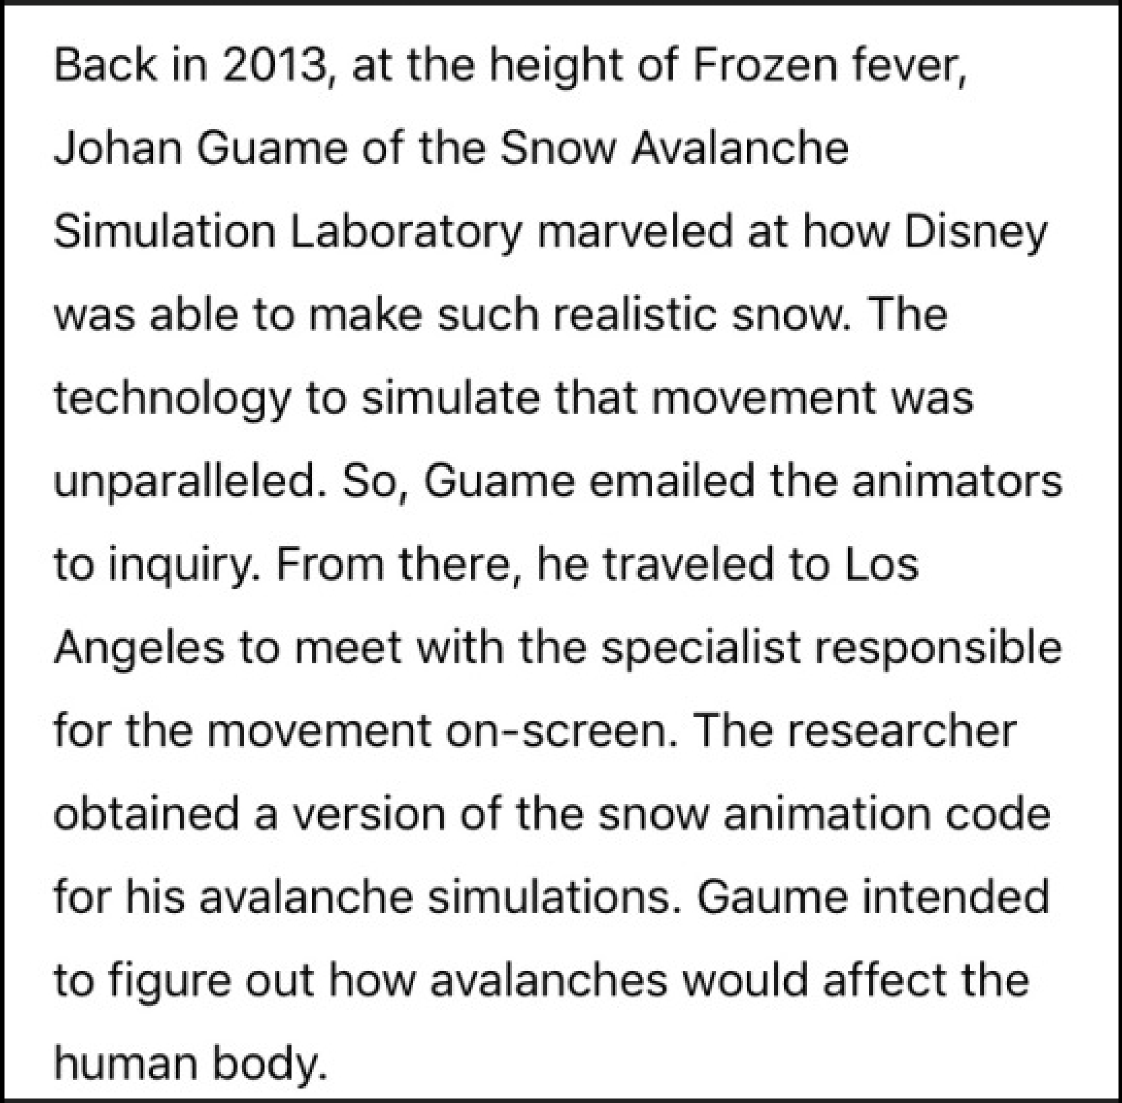
This is where things get extremely bizarre. How could such a small collapse have caused such traumatic injuries?

For that, the team turned to the movie Frozen. Yes, that movie. 13/x

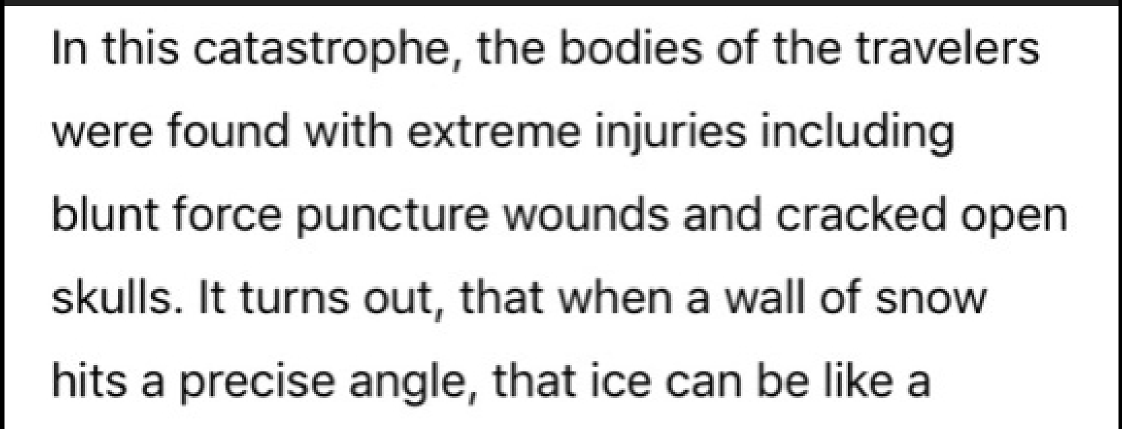
Dr Robin George Andrews 🌋
@SquigglyVolcano



A few years back, Gaume was struck by how well the movement of snow was depicted in the 2013 Disney movie Frozen—so impressed, in fact, that he decided to ask its animators how they pulled it off. He ended up going to Hollywood to chat to them. 14/x



Back in 2013, at the height of Frozen fever, Johan Guame of the Snow Avalanche Simulation Laboratory marveled at how Disney was able to make such realistic snow. The technology to simulate that movement was unparalleled. So, Guame emailed the animators to inquiry. From there, he traveled to Los Angeles to meet with the specialist responsible for the movement on-screen. The researcher obtained a version of the snow animation code for his avalanche simulations. Gaume intended to figure out how avalanches would affect the human body.



In this catastrophe, the bodies of the travelers were found with extreme injuries including blunt force puncture wounds and cracked open skulls. It turns out, that when a wall of snow hits a precise angle, that ice can be like a projectile. With the data in-hand, you could build a model to explain these gruesome injuries with a very normal avalanche. The displacement of the bodies could be the result of some of the students trying to drag their friends to safety instead of merely abandoning the camp. It's a wild ride to think that a simple computer simulation could shed so much light on a 60-year-old case, but here it is.

"People don't want it to be an avalanche," Gaume says. "It's too normal."

Had you ever heard this story before? Do you think the explanation makes sense? Let us Tokyo Cyberpunk: Emphasizes human relationship to technology, identity, psychological transhumanism, and the human-as-resource. In Tokyo Cyberpunk - Capitalism wants to own you.

Seattle Cyberpunk: Emphasizes class analysis through technology disparity, physical transhumanism, and the disposability of humans. In Seattle Cyberpunk - Capitalism wants you gone.

ultraviolet-techno-ecology Follow

Aesthetically speaking...

Tokyo Cyberpunk showcases nightlife where clean streets are illuminated by neon signs tempting you into consumerism as a therapy for your alienation. It's percieved cleanliness acts as a symbol where corporations justify their rulership through the illusion of social progress. The robot is friendly, companionable. Societal problems and capitalist contradiction are silenced and swept away without the common person knowing.

Seattle Cyberpunk showcases a nightlife of homelessness and decay with corporate monoliths on the horizon. The streetlights no longer work, but the darkness is kept partially at bay by the neon tubes of bars where people watch wishes of their youth vanish at the bottom of the bottle. The lucky ones working for the corporations do so with the fear they will be kicked to the street. The robot is an expression of force intended to keep the common person afraid. Corporations do not try to justify their rulership, social problems and contradiction are solved with force.

1. Never let them take you to a second location, they'll kill you

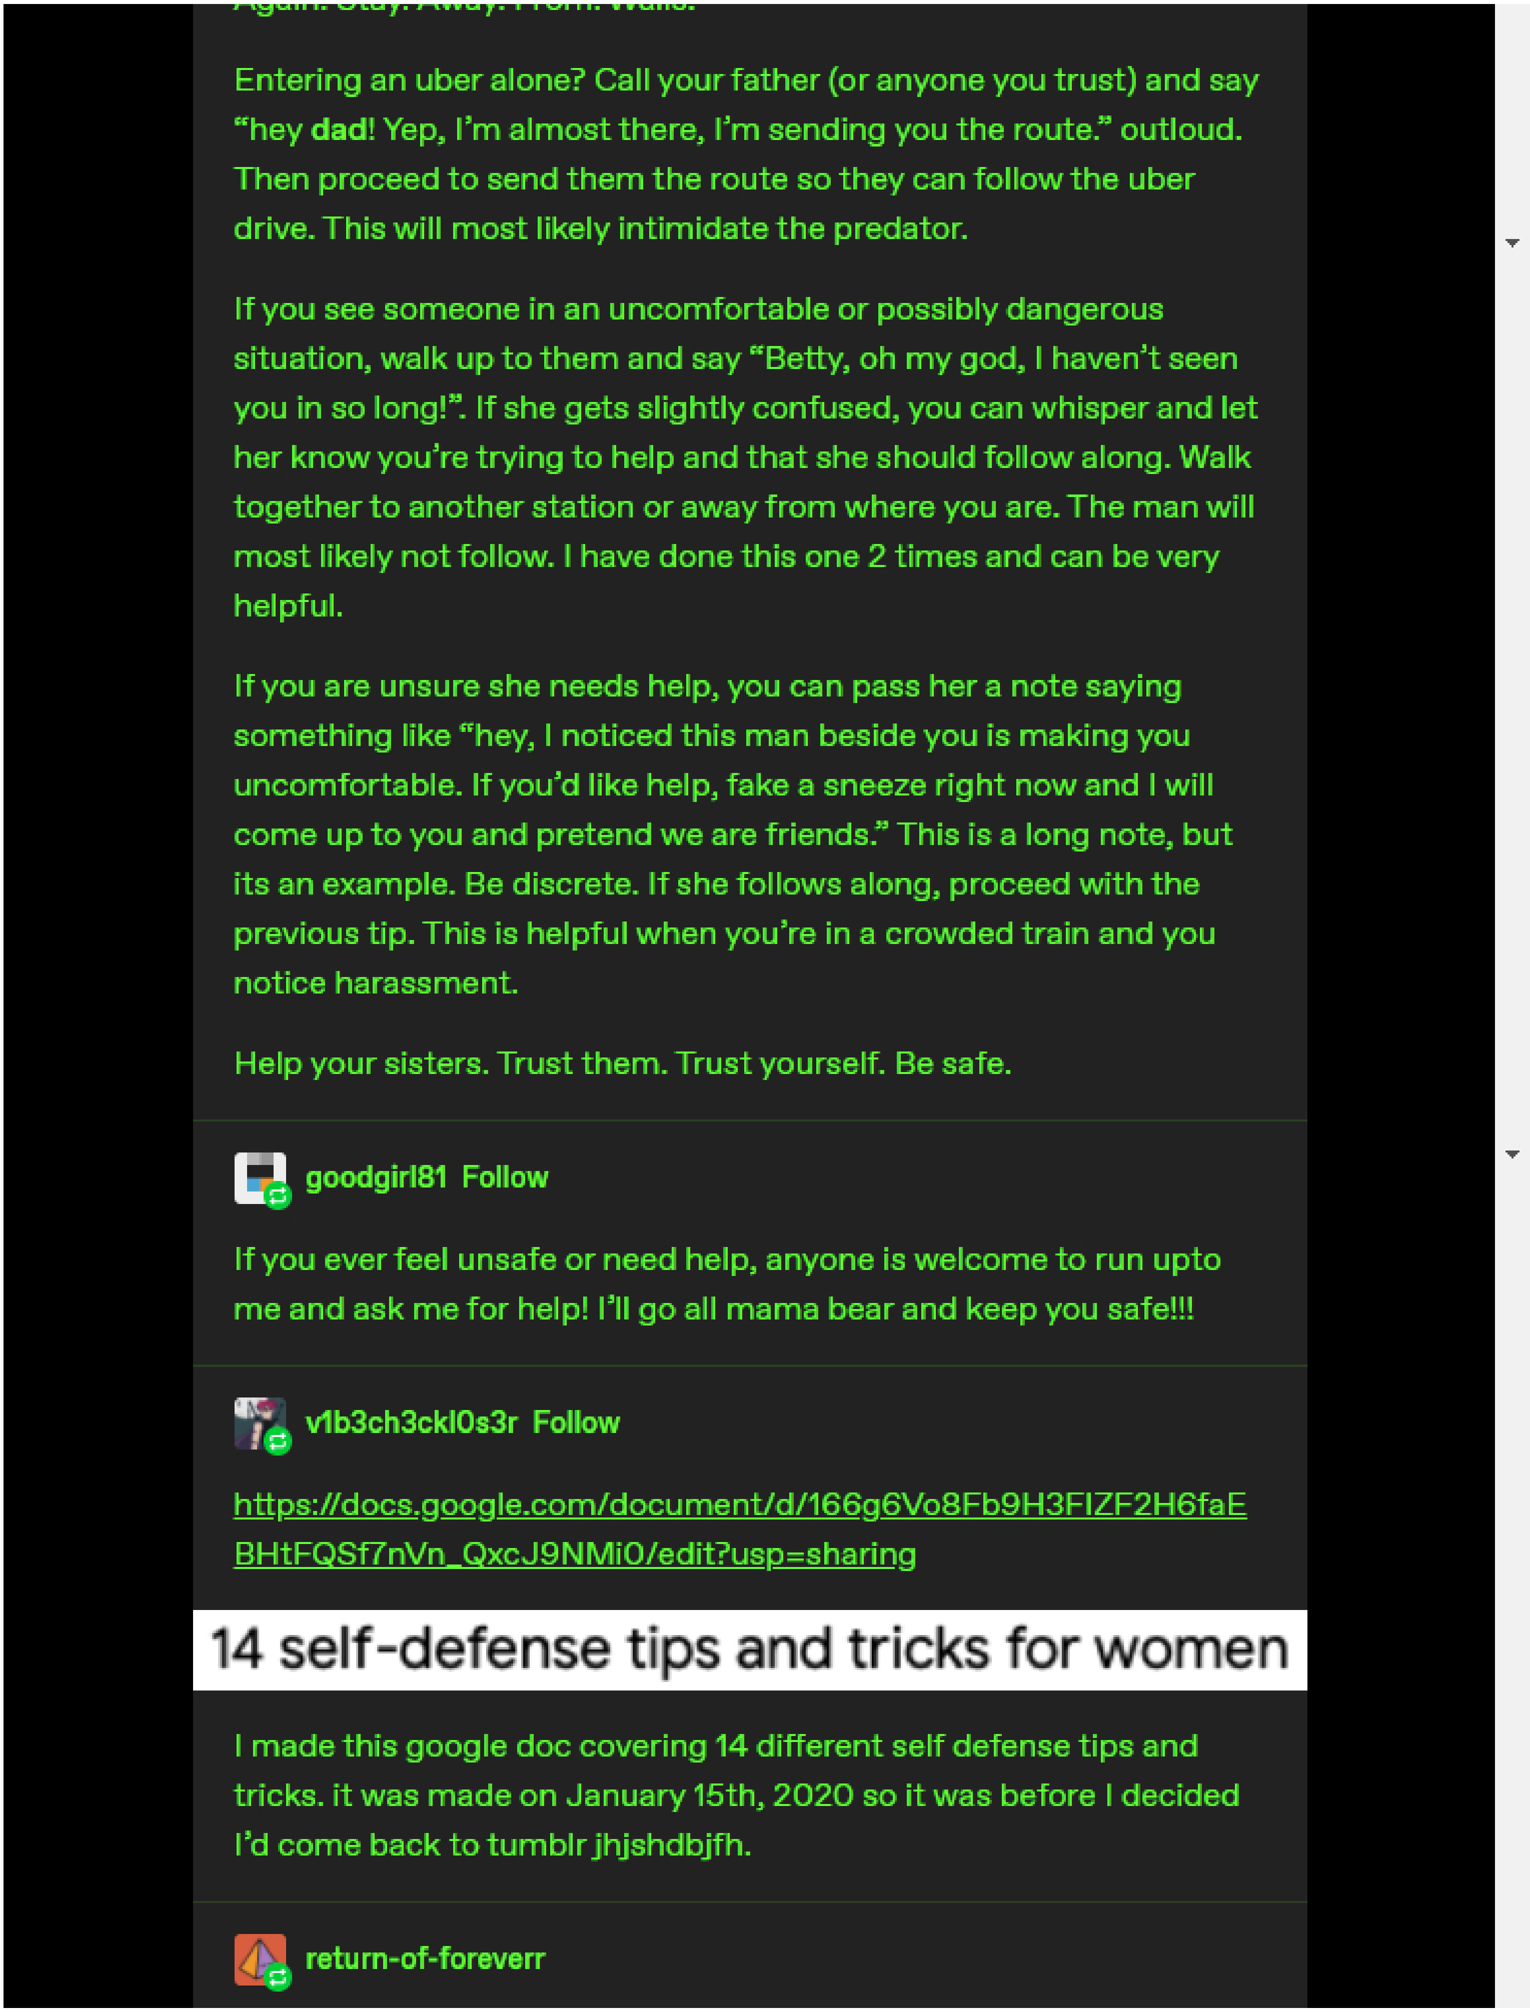
Also, do not walk close to walls. It will be easier for someone so walk past you and push you against it or corner you.

If your gut is telling you to cross the street or change your path, do it. Don't risk it. Your body knows.

If you can, buy a large umbrella and walk holding it. Studies say that predators are less likely to attempt an attack on someone that could fight back. Keys around your knuckles is fine but you'll need to get very close to do damage. Umbrellas are more precise.

Avoid wearing headphones if you are alone on an empty street. Look aware.

Again: Stay. Away. From. Walls.



Again. Stay. Away. From. Walls.

Entering an uber alone? Call your father (or anyone you trust) and say "hey dad! Yep, I'm almost there, I'm sending you the route." outloud. Then proceed to send them the route so they can follow the uber drive. This will most likely intimidate the predator.

If you see someone in an uncomfortable or possibly dangerous situation, walk up to them and say "Betty, oh my god, I haven't seen you in so long!". If she gets slightly confused, you can whisper and let her know you're trying to help and that she should follow along. Walk together to another station or away from where you are. The man will most likely not follow. I have done this one 2 times and can be very helpful.

If you are unsure she needs help, you can pass her a note saying something like "hey, I noticed this man beside you is making you uncomfortable. If you'd like help, fake a sneeze right now and I will come up to you and pretend we are friends." This is a long note, but its an example. Be discrete. If she follows along, proceed with the previous tip. This is helpful when you're in a crowded train and you notice harassment.

Help your sisters. Trust them. Trust yourself. Be safe.

just to be clear, the fact that music was nominated for a golden globe is absolutely disgusting. every single (adult) involved in that gross, ableist movie should be sickened by themselves.

for those of you who don't know, music (2021) is a movie being directed by sia about a nonverable autistic girl. not only does it not include any actually autistic people in the movie itself but it also only took advice from autism speaks which is looked at as a hate group by the majority of the autistic community. leaked scenes have also shown the movie glorifying prone restraints which are incredibly dangerous and have resulted in major injuries and even death to disabled people as recently as last year.

autistic people just like me have been incredibly outspoken about how harmful this movie is but the allistic have been mostly silent. we are already seeing reviews calling this movie 'inspiring' and important' and it's absolutely horrific! we need your help calling this out. please stand with us and call out this disgusting display of disrespect to autistic folks.

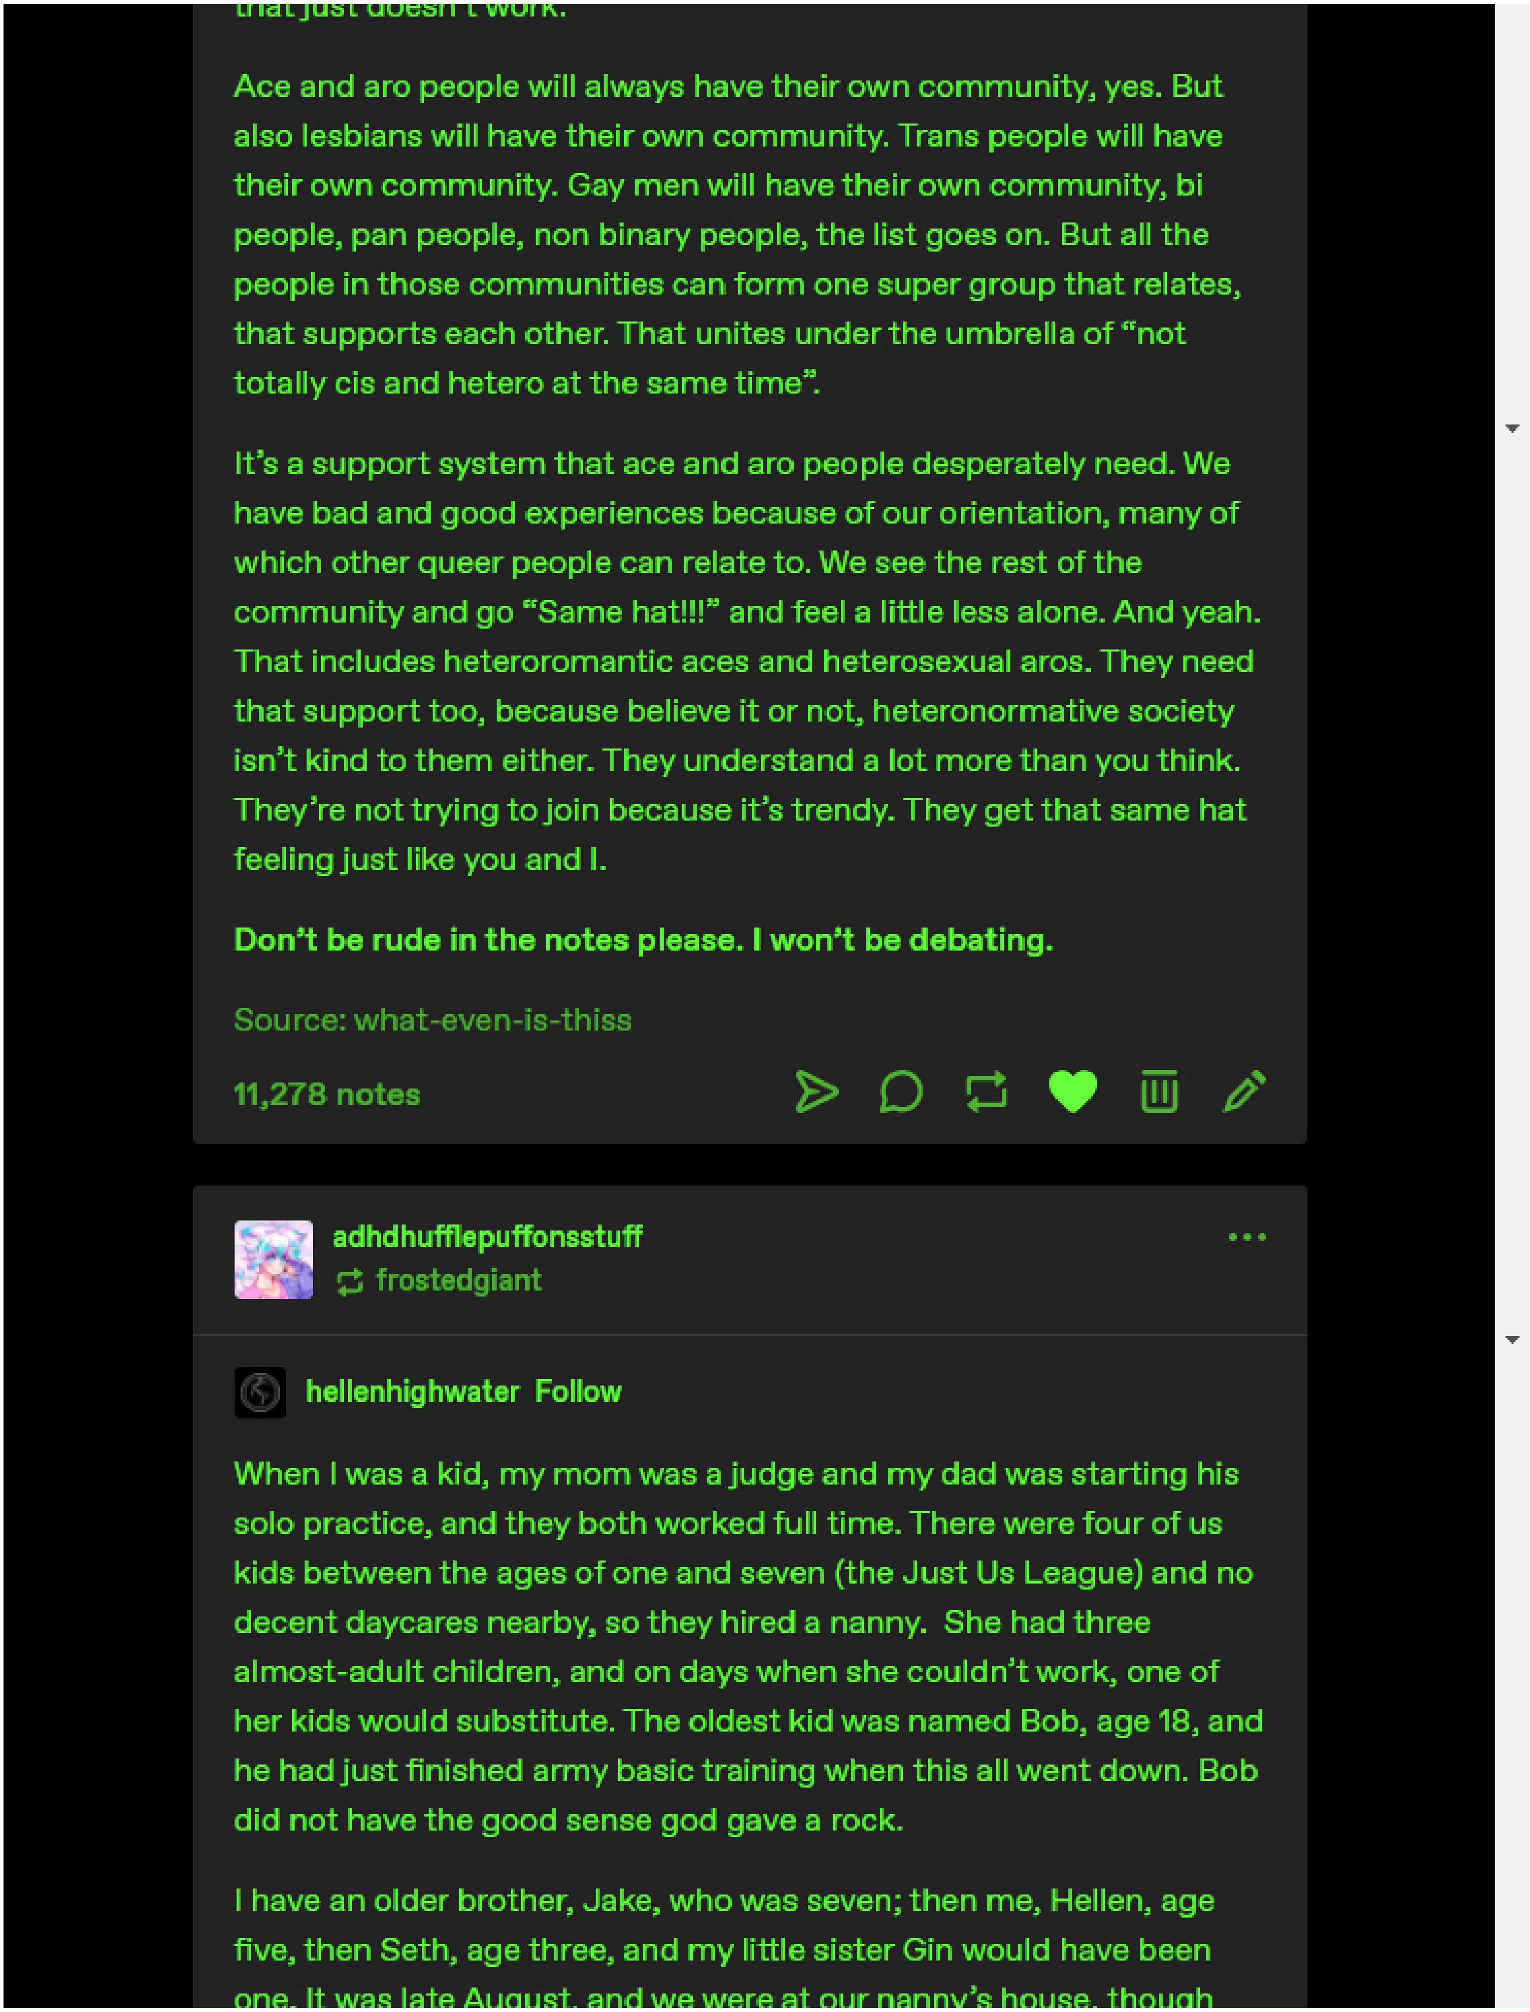
One reason that I am so passionate about aromantic and asexual people being included in discussions about the queer community is because we are so few in number.

It is so gosh darn difficult to find other ace and aro people irl. We're a small community that mostly connects through the internet because we are a small percentage of the population and not that many people know about us yet. So, most of the support we get irl is from gay, bi/pan, and trans people. Not other ace and aro people.

I have two irl asexual friends now, but for the first six years I was out as ace I had none. Maybe an online person here or there, but no physical presence. Nobody to eat lunch with or vent to or hug when things got bad. Instead, the support I got was from my gay and bi friends. They supported me, and I supported them in return. The very first person I ever came out as asexual to was a gay guy I was friends with at the time.

He was there for me and I was there for him in return. He was relieved to find out I was ace actually, because that made me another queer person he could talk to. And soon after I connected with several bi and pan people at my high school. We were able to stand up for each other, get things done, relate to each other.

Including ace and aro people in the queer community means giving ace and aro people a support system. A safe space. An opportunity to relate and be related to. To love and be loved. To protect and be protected. When you're already included by default it's easy to sit in your leather wing backed chair in your ivory tower and say "Well these people should just form their own community." but in reality that just doesn't work.



that just doesn't work.

Ace and aro people will always have their own community, yes. But also lesbians will have their own community. Trans people will have their own community. Gay men will have their own community, bi people, pan people, non binary people, the list goes on. But all the people in those communities can form one super group that relates, that supports each other. That unites under the umbrella of "not totally cis and hetero at the same time".

It's a support system that ace and aro people desperately need. We have bad and good experiences because of our orientation, many of which other queer people can relate to. We see the rest of the community and go "Same hat!!!" and feel a little less alone. And yeah. That includes heteroromantic aces and heterosexual aros. They need that support too, because believe it or not, heteronormative society isn't kind to them either. They understand a lot more than you think. They're not trying to join because it's trendy. They get that same hat feeling just like you and I.

Don't be rude in the notes please. I won't be debating.

When I was a kid, my mom was a judge and my dad was starting his solo practice, and they both worked full time. There were four of us kids between the ages of one and seven (the Just Us League) and no decent daycares nearby, so they hired a nanny. She had three almost-adult children, and on days when she couldn't work, one of her kids would substitute. The oldest kid was named Bob, age 18, and he had just finished army basic training when this all went down. Bob did not have the good sense god gave a rock.

I have an older brother, Jake, who was seven; then me, Hellen, age five, then Seth, age three, and my little sister Gin would have been one. It was late August, and we were at our nanny's house, though she was gone for the day. Bob was in charge.

Bob should probably not have been in charge.

Bob tried keeping us entertained with board games and tag and movies. Gin took a nap. Eventually he decided to get creative, and sat us down in the living room with a game and vanished into the garage. There was a smashing sound. And then some saw noises. And then some hammering. And then we saw him going around the house to the back yard through the windows, though we were too short to see what he was doing. And finally, he yelled to us to come out into the driveway.

Jake and Seth and I trooped out. Bob had both hands behind his back. He stepped up to Jake and revealed what he had in his right hand.

It was a wooden sword. It was clearly made from what appeared to be parts of a chair's legs, cut down and nailed together. He presented this, and announced, "You are Sir Jake, the strongest knight!"

He stepped up to Seth and presented what was in his left hand. It was another wooden sword, smaller than the first, also crudely made out of chair legs. He announced, "You are Sir Seth, the bravest knight!"

At this point, I was practically vibrating in place, waiting eagerly for my sword so I could use it to whale on my brothers, as god intended me to do. I was therefore understandably disappointed to be presented with the business end of a garden hose and told, "You are Miss Hellen, the Water Fairy!"

"No," I said. "I want a sword."

Bob was confused. "But you get water magic! Magic's great!"

"No." I repeated, holding the hose. It had a spray nozzle set to jet. "I want a sword."

"Magic's great. Magic's better than a sword." Bob insisted. "You'll see. Wait here a moment."

And then Bob ran around the side of house and vanished.

We stood in the driveway. Jake and Seth poked each other with their swords. I spritzed them idly with the hose, trying to decide which of them would be easier to steal a sword from.

And then we heard a quiet wooshing noise, and smelled smoke.

We turned. As we watched, a line of fire rushed around the corner of the house, consuming a path of gasoline poured into the dry August grass.

We paused and considered this for a few moments. I raised the hose and sprayed a jet of water at the fire. It went out. We glanced at each other. Then we took off running, following the trail of fire, spraying as we went.

The fire led in a path around the house to the back yard. As we turned the corner, we saw Bob, clad in a bathrobe and holding a curtain rod, standing in the center of a large ring of burning grass. He cackled manically. “I am the FIRE WIZARD! Your puny swords are useless! Nothing but water magic can defeat me!”

I promptly blasted him with the hose. He spluttered. The fire did not go out.

I turned the hose on the fire itself, spraying a section close to us so that it would extinguish. As soon as there was enough room, Jake charged forward, brandishing his chair leg sword with a battle cry. Seth, always happy to be included, followed. They ran into the circle and began beating Bob around the kneecaps with their swords. I kept spraying.

Eventually, Bob the Fire Wizard was brought down and all the fire was extinguished. Seth and Jake continued to work on bruising Bob’s shins, and I quickly discarded the hose to lend my fists and extremely pointy elbows to the cause. Bob lay in the smoldering grass, probably regretting using such sturdy chair legs.

Once we’d all tired ourselves out and lay panting in a heap, Bob decided it was time for the moral of the story. “You see, a sword is nothing compared to the power of a little girl with _magic_.”

We thought about this for a few moments. Bob nodded wisely. Jake and Seth nodded back.

“I still want a sword.” I said.

there's a lot of people in the tags and replies expressing several concerns, which I will address:

- "Where was Gin?" She was sleeping in a crib on the sunporch. We did this a lot–played outside while she napped–because we could hear her if she woke up and started crying, but were less likely to wake her up. She slept through the whole thing and was totally fine.
- "You can't put out a gasoline fire with water." At the time, my little kid brain assumed that any flammable liquid was gas, but in retrospect it could have been almost anything. It very well may have been something other than gasoline. All I know is I could extinguish it with a garden hose.
- "What did your parents say?" A lot of swear words at a very high volume.
- "Did you get a sword?" Yes. Lots. Here are a couple of them, and also my pet ringneck dove, Arson. You can see how this all may have had some lasting effect on me.

But I mean just imagine being in love with a creature who lives inside your own consciousness? I mean, you share your own perception with them as though you're one entity. Can you even– can you even fathom seeing yourself through their eyes in the 3rd person, naked and vulnerable and exposed from the inside out and feeling their savage love for you as though it was your own emotion? Loving th- loving them at all would force you to confront the mortifying ordeal of knowing yourself–of loving yourself, okay? It's–it's not just about the.. it's not just about the shapeshifting alien sex okay? It's about the paradox, it's about the pining, it's about the metacognition, and it's also about the shapeshifting alien sex!

the worse climate disaster gets, the more you'll see closet eugenicists start to advocate for letting people die. you need to be prepared to combat the ideology wherever you see it, because it's only going to get worse and worse

Read everything having to do with climate disaster critically. If the central argument underlying what's being said is that the death of disabled and/or racialized people is inevitable, natural, or desirable– that's a fascist.

they might be appear to be a garden variety republican or liberal or even a leftist at first, but know that if that argument is being made, their underlying ideology is one of supremacism, and given additional climate stress, they will become more blatant about it.

“The Earth will heal itself” “humanity is like a virus” “The Earth will be better off once humans die out.” “The Earth is overpopulated, we need to let our numbers come back down.”

These are eco-fascist talking points. The climate disaster will hit the global poor FIRST and WORST. While the capitalist elite who CAUSED this problem will have the resources to jet around to whatever corner of the Earth is still inhabitable, or to their space arcs, or their Mars colonies run by indentured servants- the global poor will be the ones who die by the millions.

This is not justice. This is not nature. This is neither inevitable nor good. Do not let people use environmentalism as an excuse for genocide.

for everyone asking about my Very Sensible Name Choosing Algorithm™, aka how to save your child/yourself strife down the line, written in regards to White Baby Naming Culture:

1. one spelling. chose a name with one spelling. one possible spelling. saves so much trouble every time you make a doctor's appt or order food. (or at the very least, pick the most common spelling.) otherwise you will be asked "how do you spell that?" approx 8800 times in their lifetime. save yourself the hassle.
2. one pronunciation, preferably intuitive. saves a lot of hassle if teachers/receptionists/etc can look at your name and be able to guess how to pronounce it. again, you will otherwise get asked "how do you pronounce that?" approx 8800 times in your lifetime

3. common enough that most people have heard it & know how to spell it (see Rules 1 & 2)
4. uncommon enough that you are likely to be the only person in your class/peer group with that name
5. UNISEX

i want to add that these don't apply to cross-cultural names. i was 13 when i came up with this, so it comes very much from the perspective of a white child who hated their name for multiple reasons.

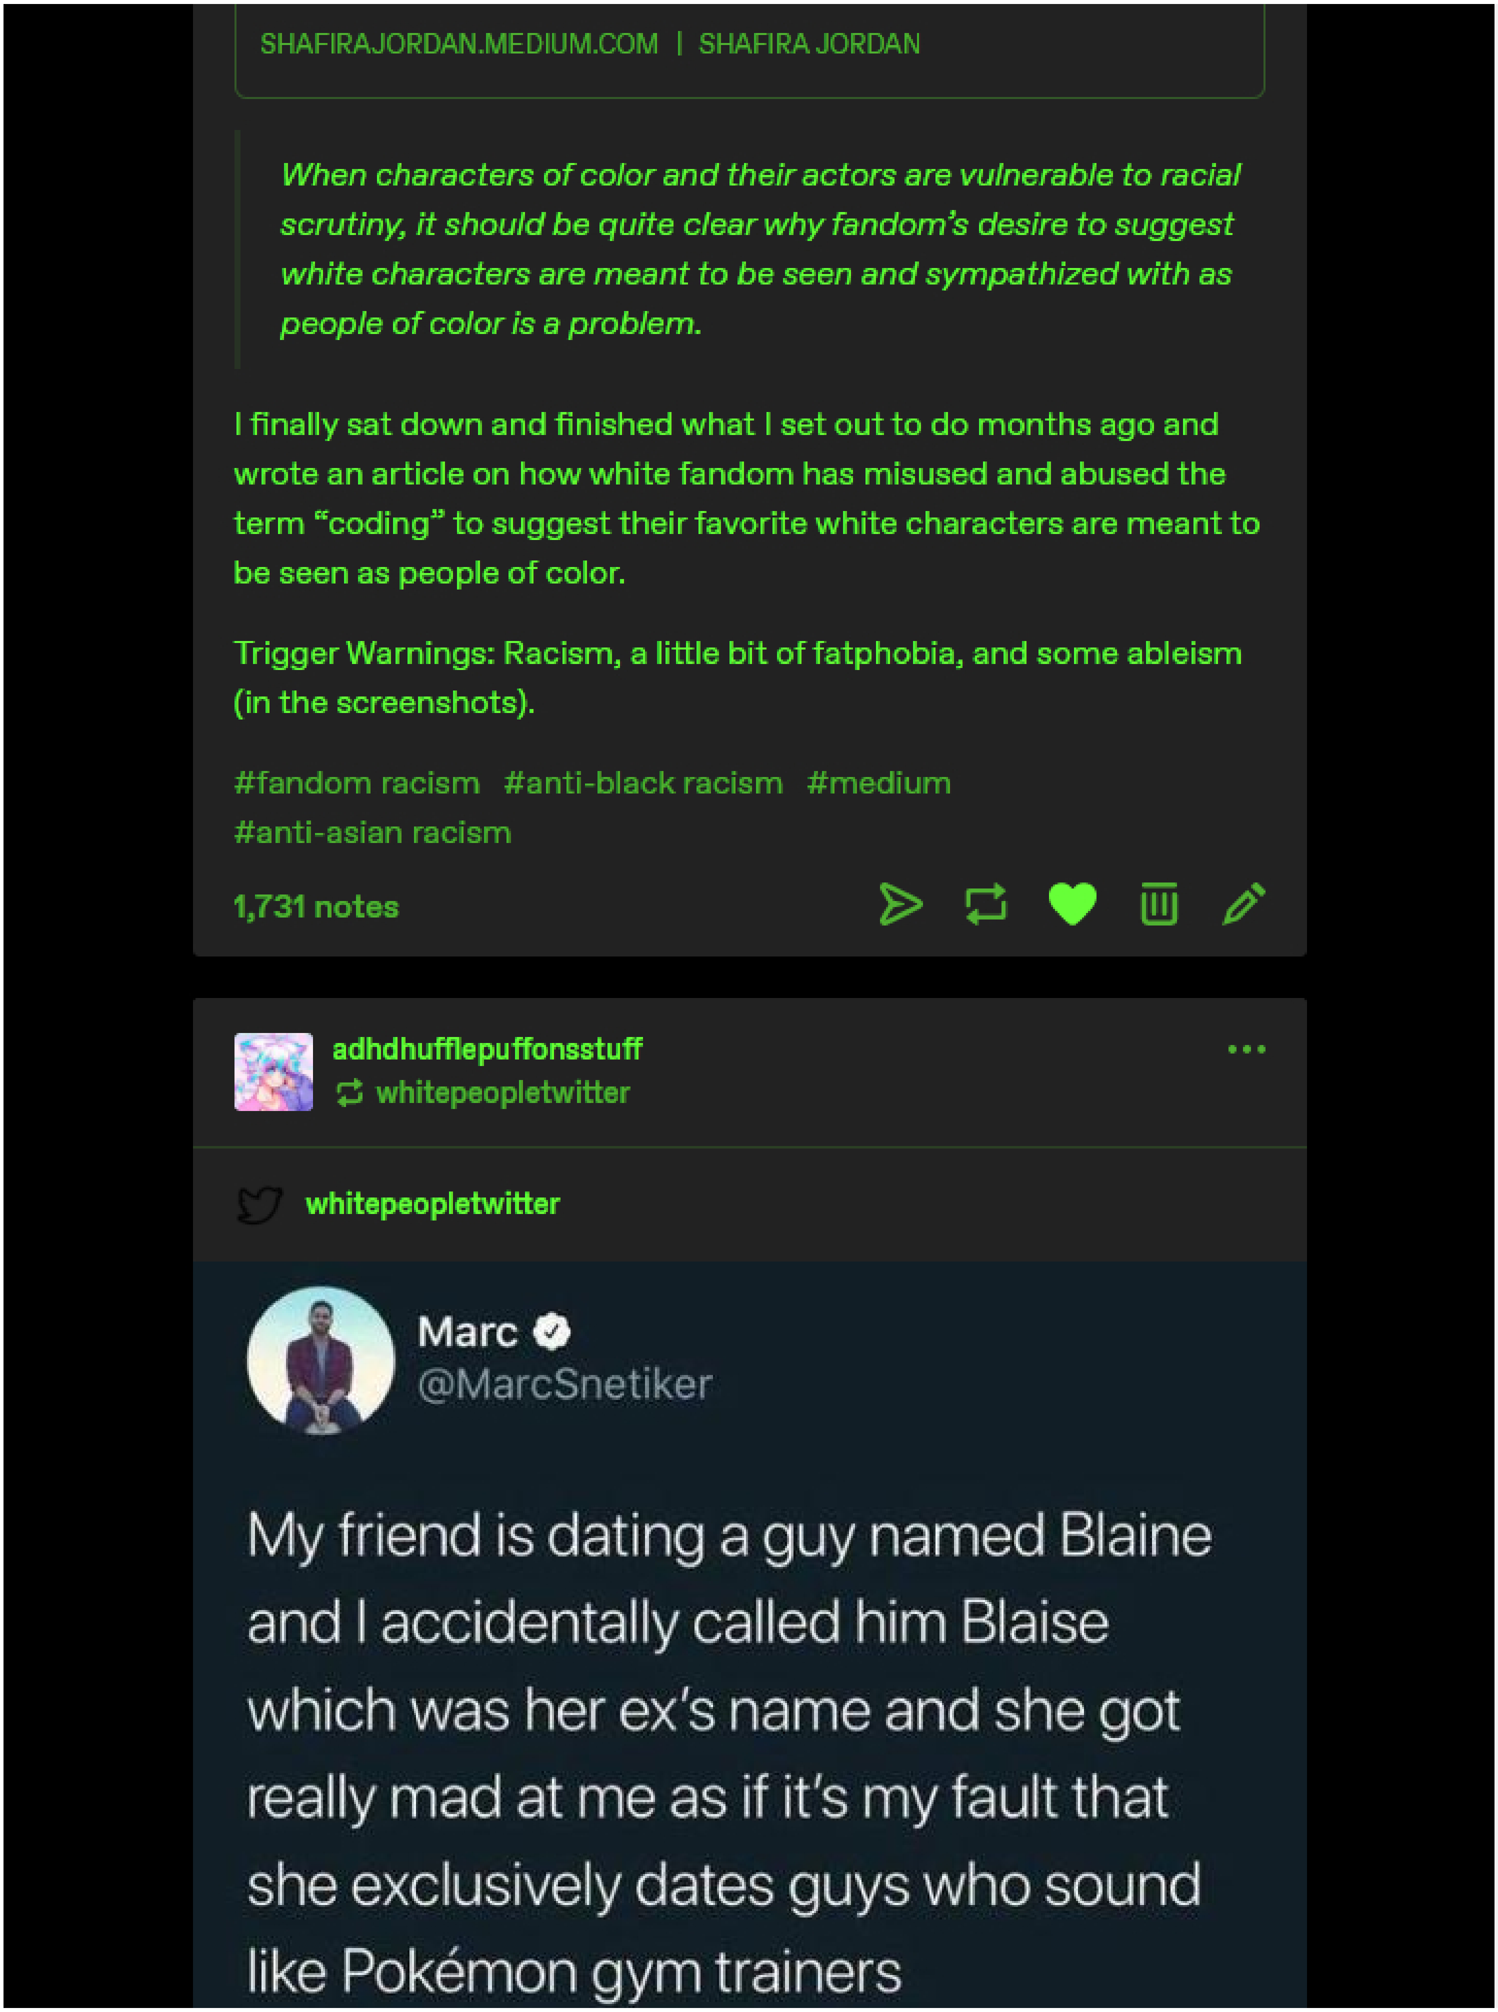
How White Fandom is Colonizing “Character-Coding”

It’s time for fandom (particularly, white fandom) to learn what “character-coding” is and how they’ve been misusing it.



SHAFIRAJORDAN.MEDIUM.COM | SHAFIRA JORDAN

> When characters of color and their actors are vulnerable to racial scrutiny, it should be quite clear why fandom's desire to suggest white characters are meant to be seen and sympathized with as people of color is a problem.

I finally sat down and finished what I set out to do months ago and wrote an article on how white fandom has misused and abused the term "coding" to suggest their favorite white characters are meant to be seen as people of color.

Trigger Warnings: Racism, a little bit of fatphobia, and some ableism (in the screenshots).

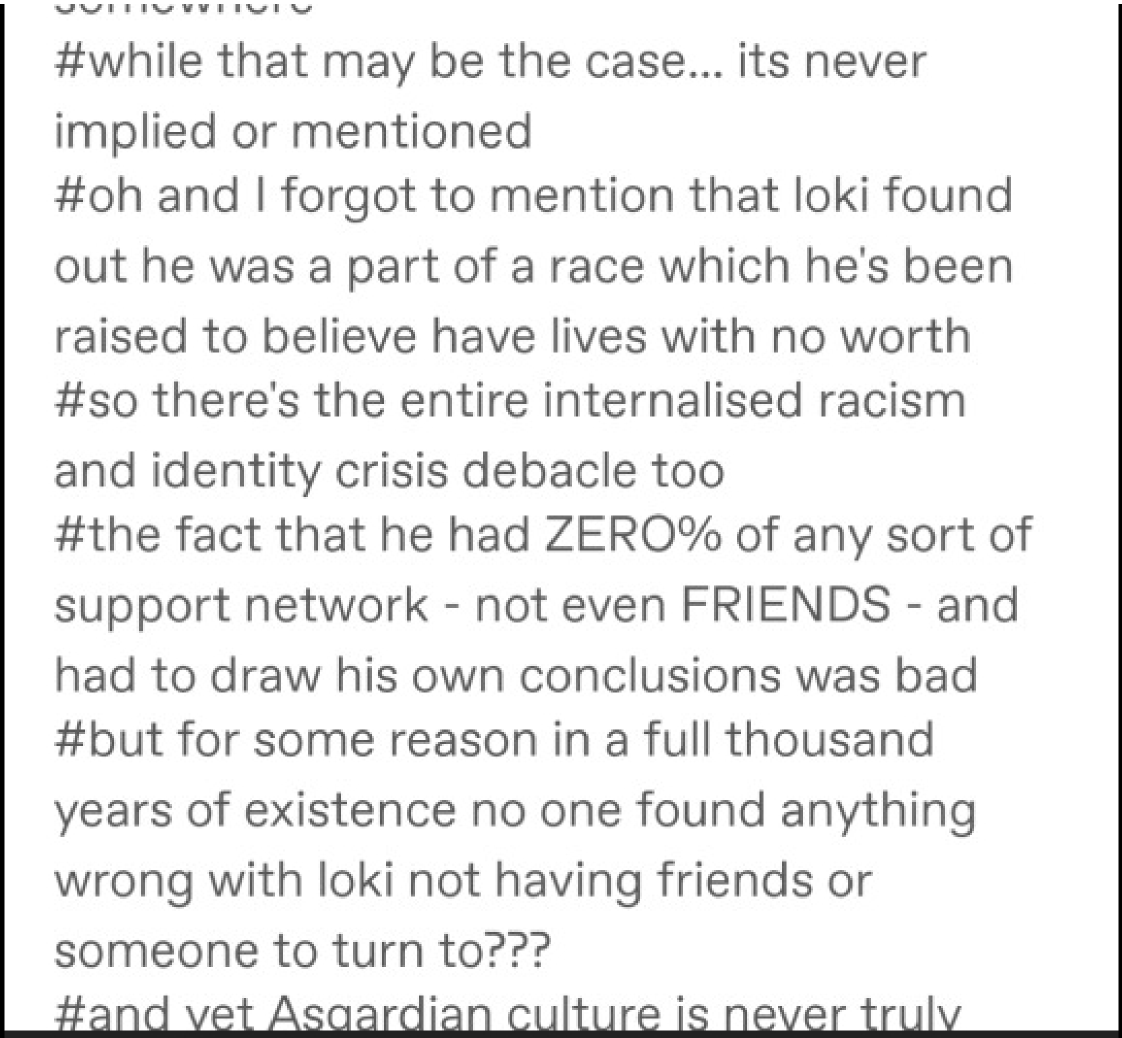
#marvel is very quick to pile on the trauma and then promptly pretend it has been handled in a few words or off-screen somewhere



somewhere
#while that may be the case... its never implied or mentioned
#oh and I forgot to mention that loki found out he was a part of a race which he's been raised to believe have lives with no worth
#so there's the entire internalised racism and identity crisis debacle too
#the fact that he had ZERO% of any sort of support network - not even FRIENDS - and had to draw his own conclusions was bad #but for some reason in a full thousand years of existence no one found anything wrong with loki not having friends or someone to turn to???
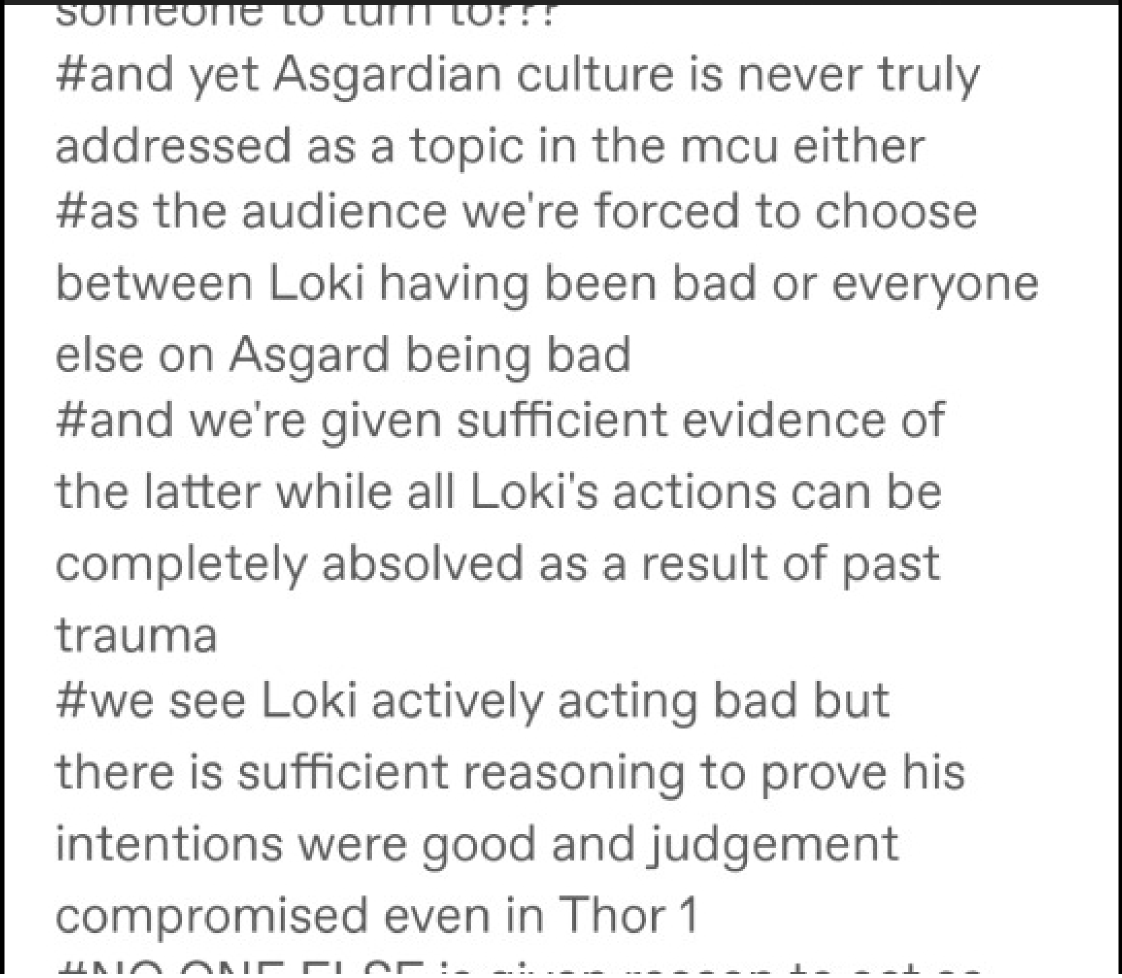
#and yet Asgardian culture is never truly



someone to turn to???
#and yet Asgardian culture is never truly addressed as a topic in the mcu either #as the audience we're forced to choose between Loki having been bad or everyone else on Asgard being bad #and we're given sufficient evidence of the latter while all Loki's actions can be completely absolved as a result of past trauma
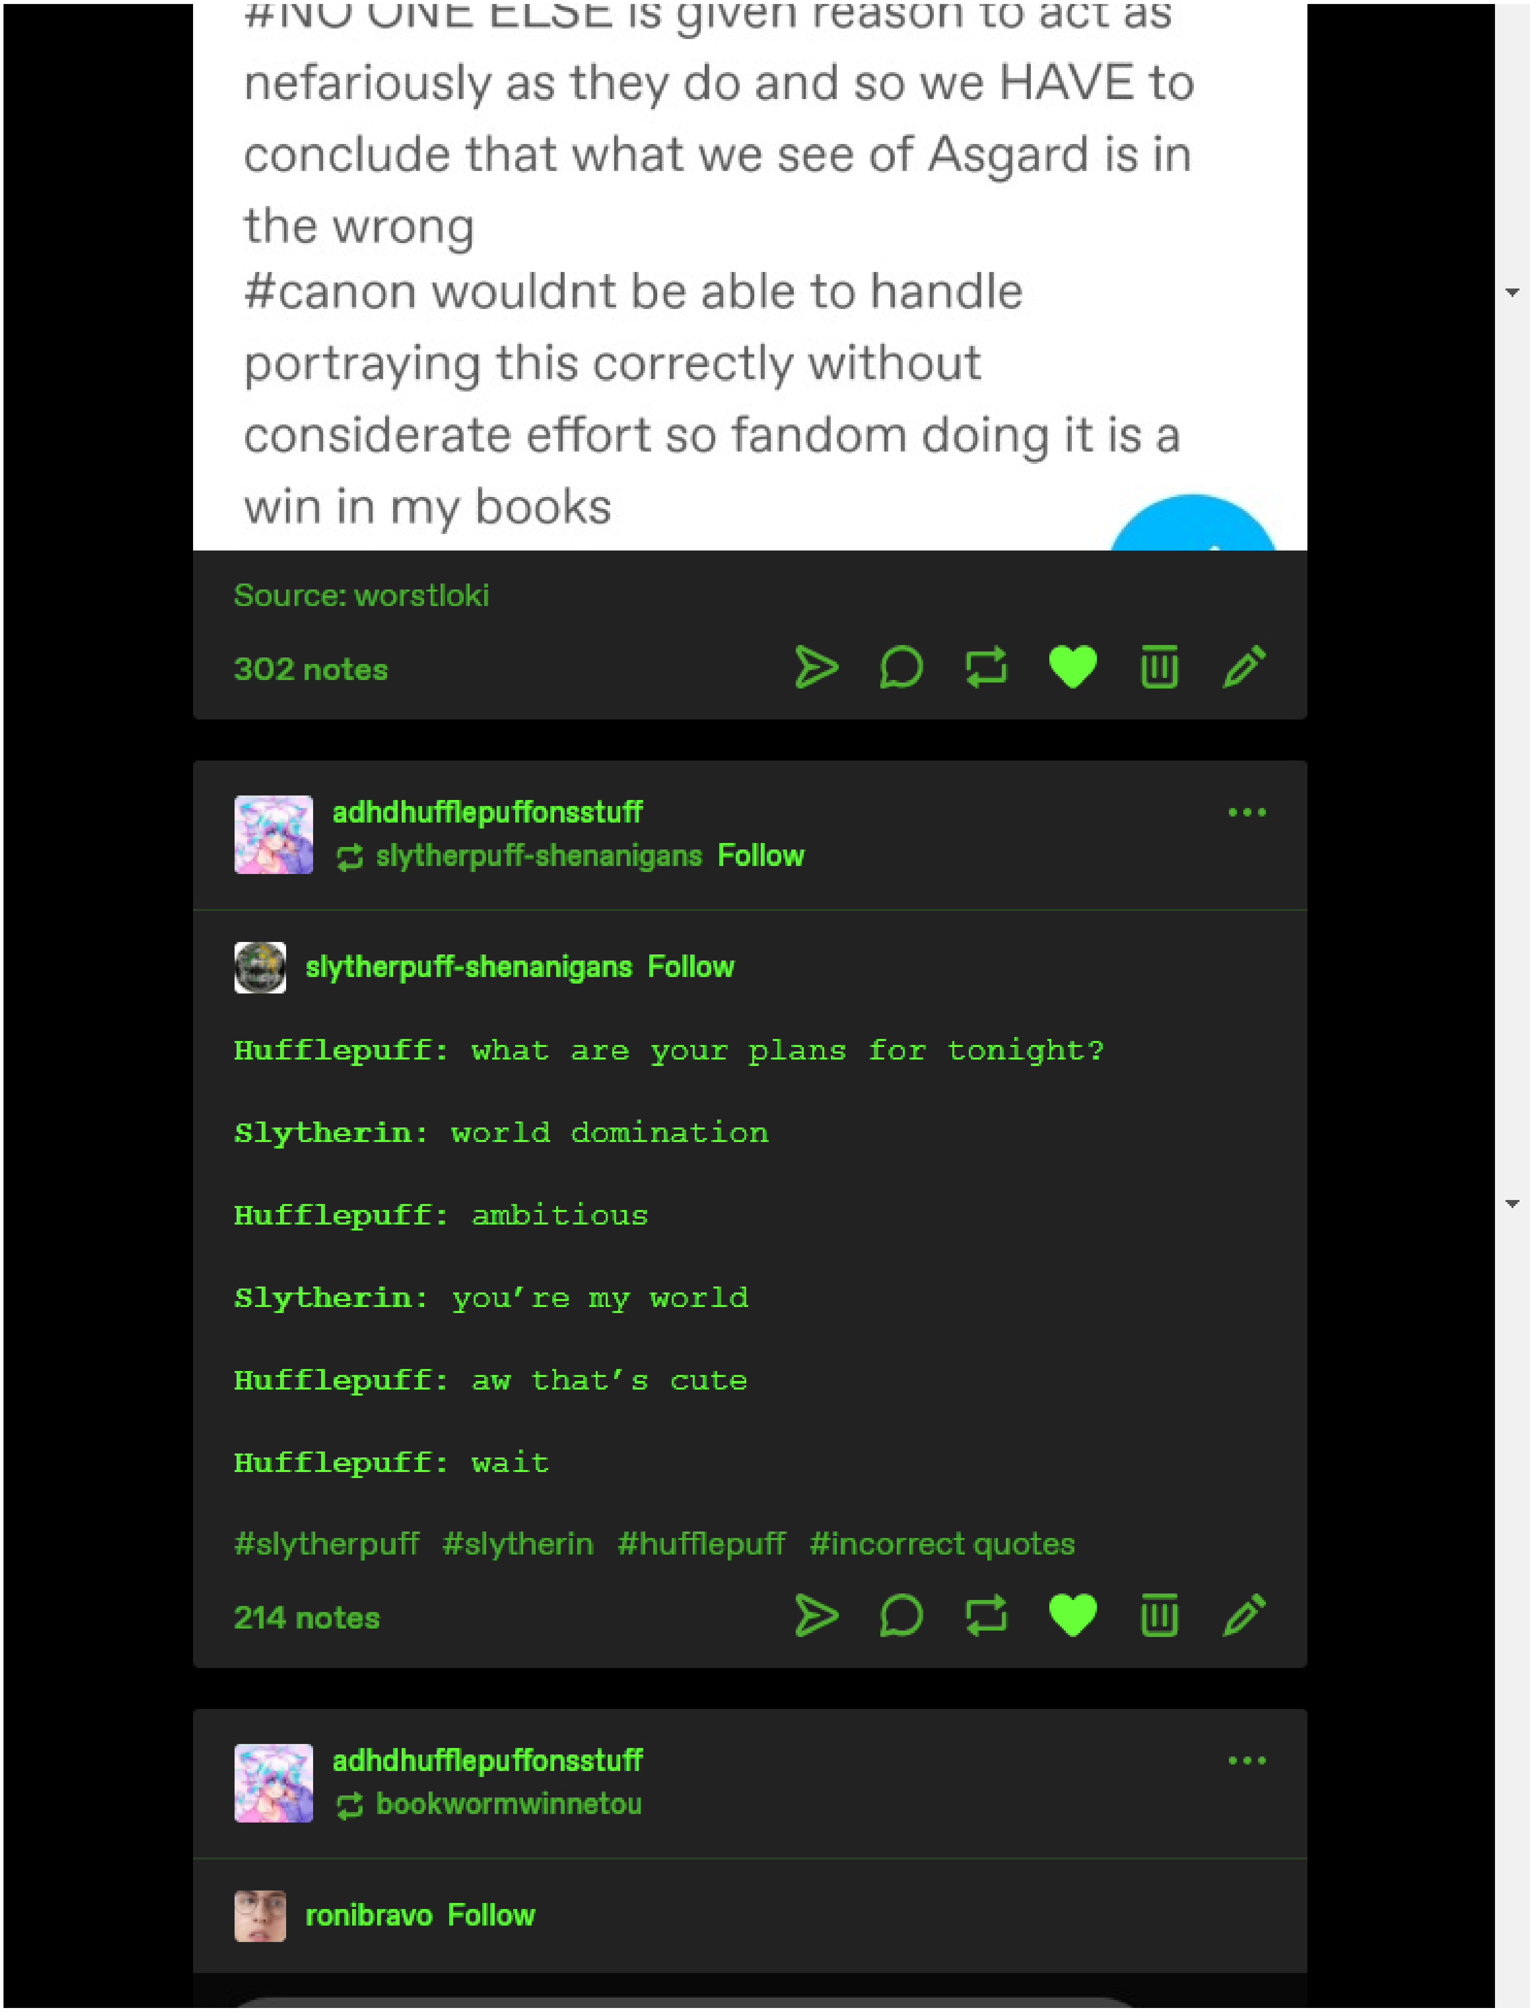
#we see Loki actively acting bad but there is sufficient reasoning to prove his intentions were good and judgement compromised even in Thor 1
#NO ONE ELSE is given reason to act so



#NO ONE ELSE is given reason to act as nefariously as they do and so we HAVE to conclude that what we see of Asgard is in the wrong

#canon wouldnt be able to handle portraying this correctly without considerate effort so fandom doing it is a win in my books

1. “Raven” was an occasionally-encountered name for a girl in the contemporary period, and “Ebony” would be at least recognizable as a name. The other elements of this name are flatly atypical.

2. During this part of the War Period, this character’s hairstyle would not be considered shocking, but it would be viewed as garish and nonconformist.

3. A contemporary music performer known for a melancholy style of music and a gothic and dramatic aesthetic. The title of the work probably comes from one of her songs. However, her aesthetic and attitude has little in common with that in this work, being much more conventional and less garish.

4. A member of the contemporary band “My Chemical Romance”, also notable for a “gothic”, melancholy, and macabre aesthetic _______ is here used only as an expletive.

5. i.e. the speaker considers him to be handsome and attractive; despite the pornographic material later in this work, the word “f ” is here used only as an expletive.

6. Vampires as romantic figures had been increasing in popularity over this period, with a trend away from malicious monsters towards seductive but more benevolent figures, romanticized by their capability of being terrible.

7. Strangely, despite the characterization of this character as a Satanist, “witch” should here be characterized as having meaning similar to “wizard” and not “idolater”, “sorceress”, “maleficar”, or other practitioner of what we today recognize as “witchcraft”. The background material to this work constantly faced accusations of being satanic by an uneducated reactionary public to whom the difference between technology, wizardry and witchcraft was not meaningful (”witch” was sometimes even considered a female equivalent to “wizard”!), which completely failed to diminish its popularity.

8. It is important to understand that “goth” as an aesthetic, counterculture or subculture had a completely different meaning in the contemporary period than it does today – what remains similar is the love of the melancholy, the macabre, the dramatic, the romantic, and contempt for conventionalism. In the mid-to-early-late War Period, “Gothic” people were associated with contempt for morality, certain types of sexual display (usually of a shocking and sometimes fetishistic type), various forms of concupiscence, and a fairly significant connection to the occult and even to outright Satanism, though the latter was all but universally an affectation (this is true of most Mid War Period satanism). See contrast on p 321, The Gothic Movement In the Catholic Church. Moreover, the “gothic” aesthetic as described by this character is a stunted and over-the-top form that has also been corrupted by the counterculture-commericalism that was universal in the Late War Period.

9. A clothing store mostly specializing in counterculture-commercialized and faddist apparel. Critics accused it of being a mercantile vulture that fed by turning more honest and vivacious countercultures into fads.

10. It was almost unheard-of for women in the Mid or Late War Period to wear corsets, but they appeared in the Gothic subculture (which itself heavily borrowed from sources such as Victorian-era clothing, including mourning dress). However, what Enoby is describing is probably not actually a true corset, but a "corset top", which is essentially a laced bodice. Either would be worn with neither chemise nor overblouse.

11. Probably a nondraped skirt that barely passes her wrist.

12. Hose, stockings, or tights in the form of a wide-open mesh

13. Probably not actually military issue boots; these were tall, heavy black leather boots with lacing all the way up.

14. This character's outfit would be considered inappropriate for school in the Late War Period, but not shocking to Late War Period mores except by its garishness.

15. Originally meant students at a university-preparatory school; with the extremely high percentage of students seeking to attend university in the Late War Period, this came to mean a subculture of young people who adopted a highly conventionalistic and professionalistic attitude and sought admission to the prestigious and traditionalistic universities in the Eastern United States, often without academics being their true passion. Such people were often viewed as social climbers and sometimes attracted contempt from both their less-professionally-oriented peers and from those who were true intellectuals.

16. Also known as "giving the finger"; a very rude gesture in the War Period as it is in ours.

18. This phrase went through considerable popular memetic mutation (as did the entire tract): "It was _______ <weather> so I felt ________. A lot of _______ stared at me. I ________ them." See extra material 34c.

17. I.E. "How are you today?", "how are you feeling?" as a greeting.

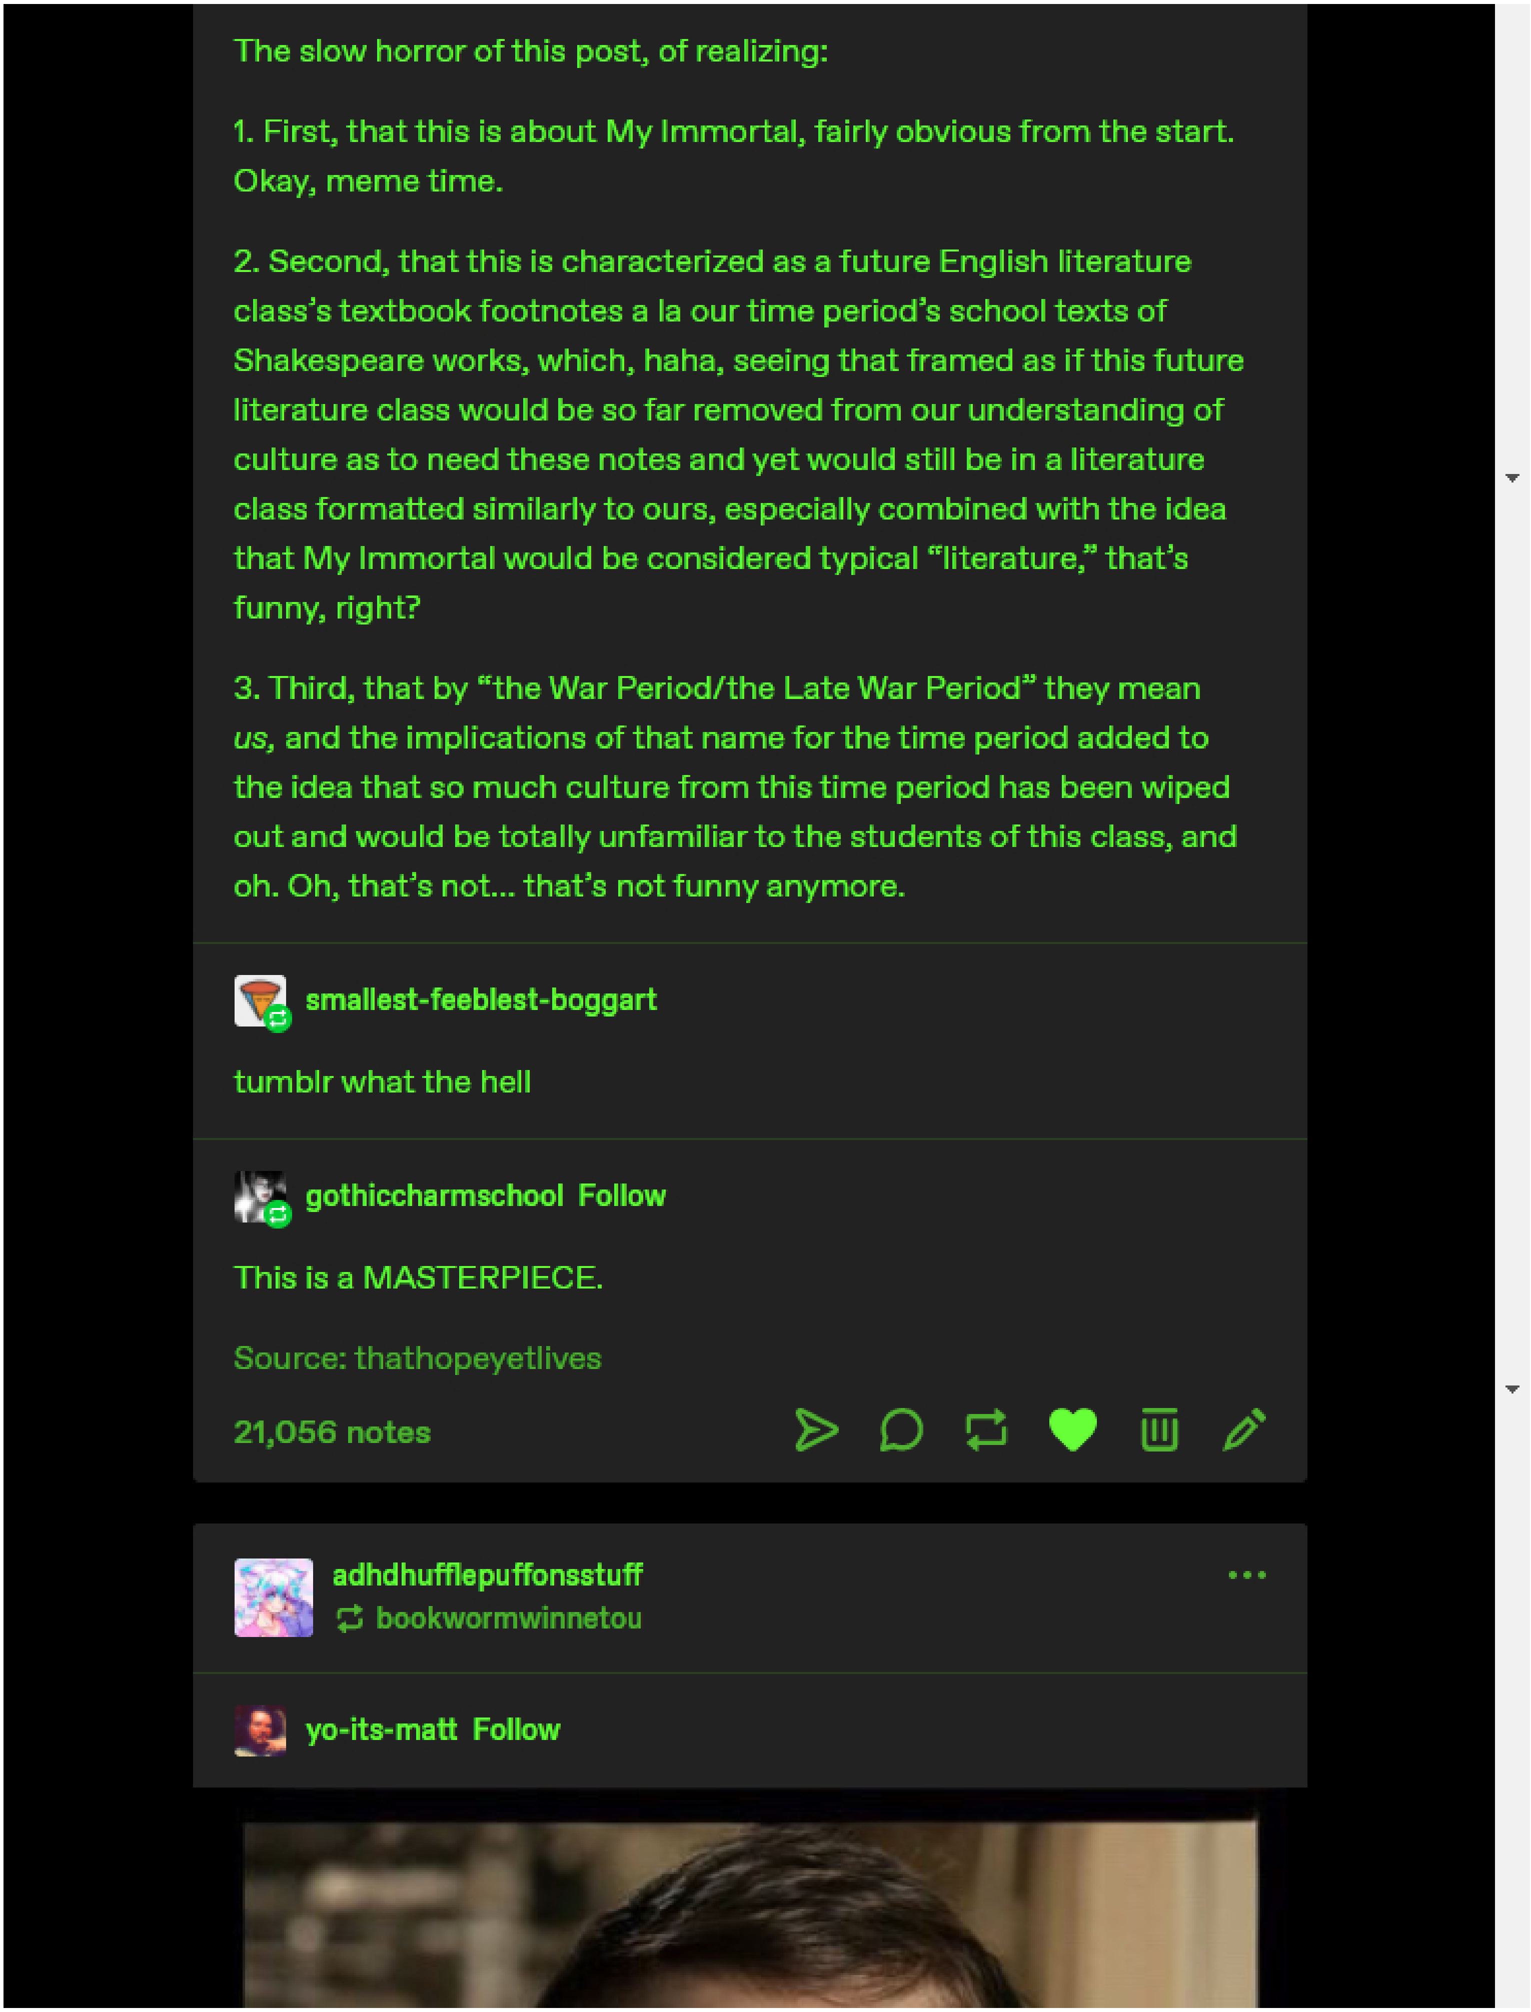
do you think the writer of My Immortal lives in quiet pleasure knowing what they've brought into the world cannot be killed nor can they be held accountable

dragonheartftherpays Follow



The slow horror of this post, of realizing:

1. First, that this is about My Immortal, fairly obvious from the start. Okay, meme time.

2. Second, that this is characterized as a future English literature class's textbook footnotes a la our time period's school texts of Shakespeare works, which, haha, seeing that framed as if this future literature class would be so far removed from our understanding of culture as to need these notes and yet would still be in a literature class formatted similarly to ours, especially combined with the idea that My Immortal would be considered typical "literature," that's funny, right?

3. Third, that by "the War Period/the Late War Period" they mean us, and the implications of that name for the time period added to the idea that so much culture from this time period has been wiped out and would be totally unfamiliar to the students of this class, and oh. Oh, that's not... that's not funny anymore.

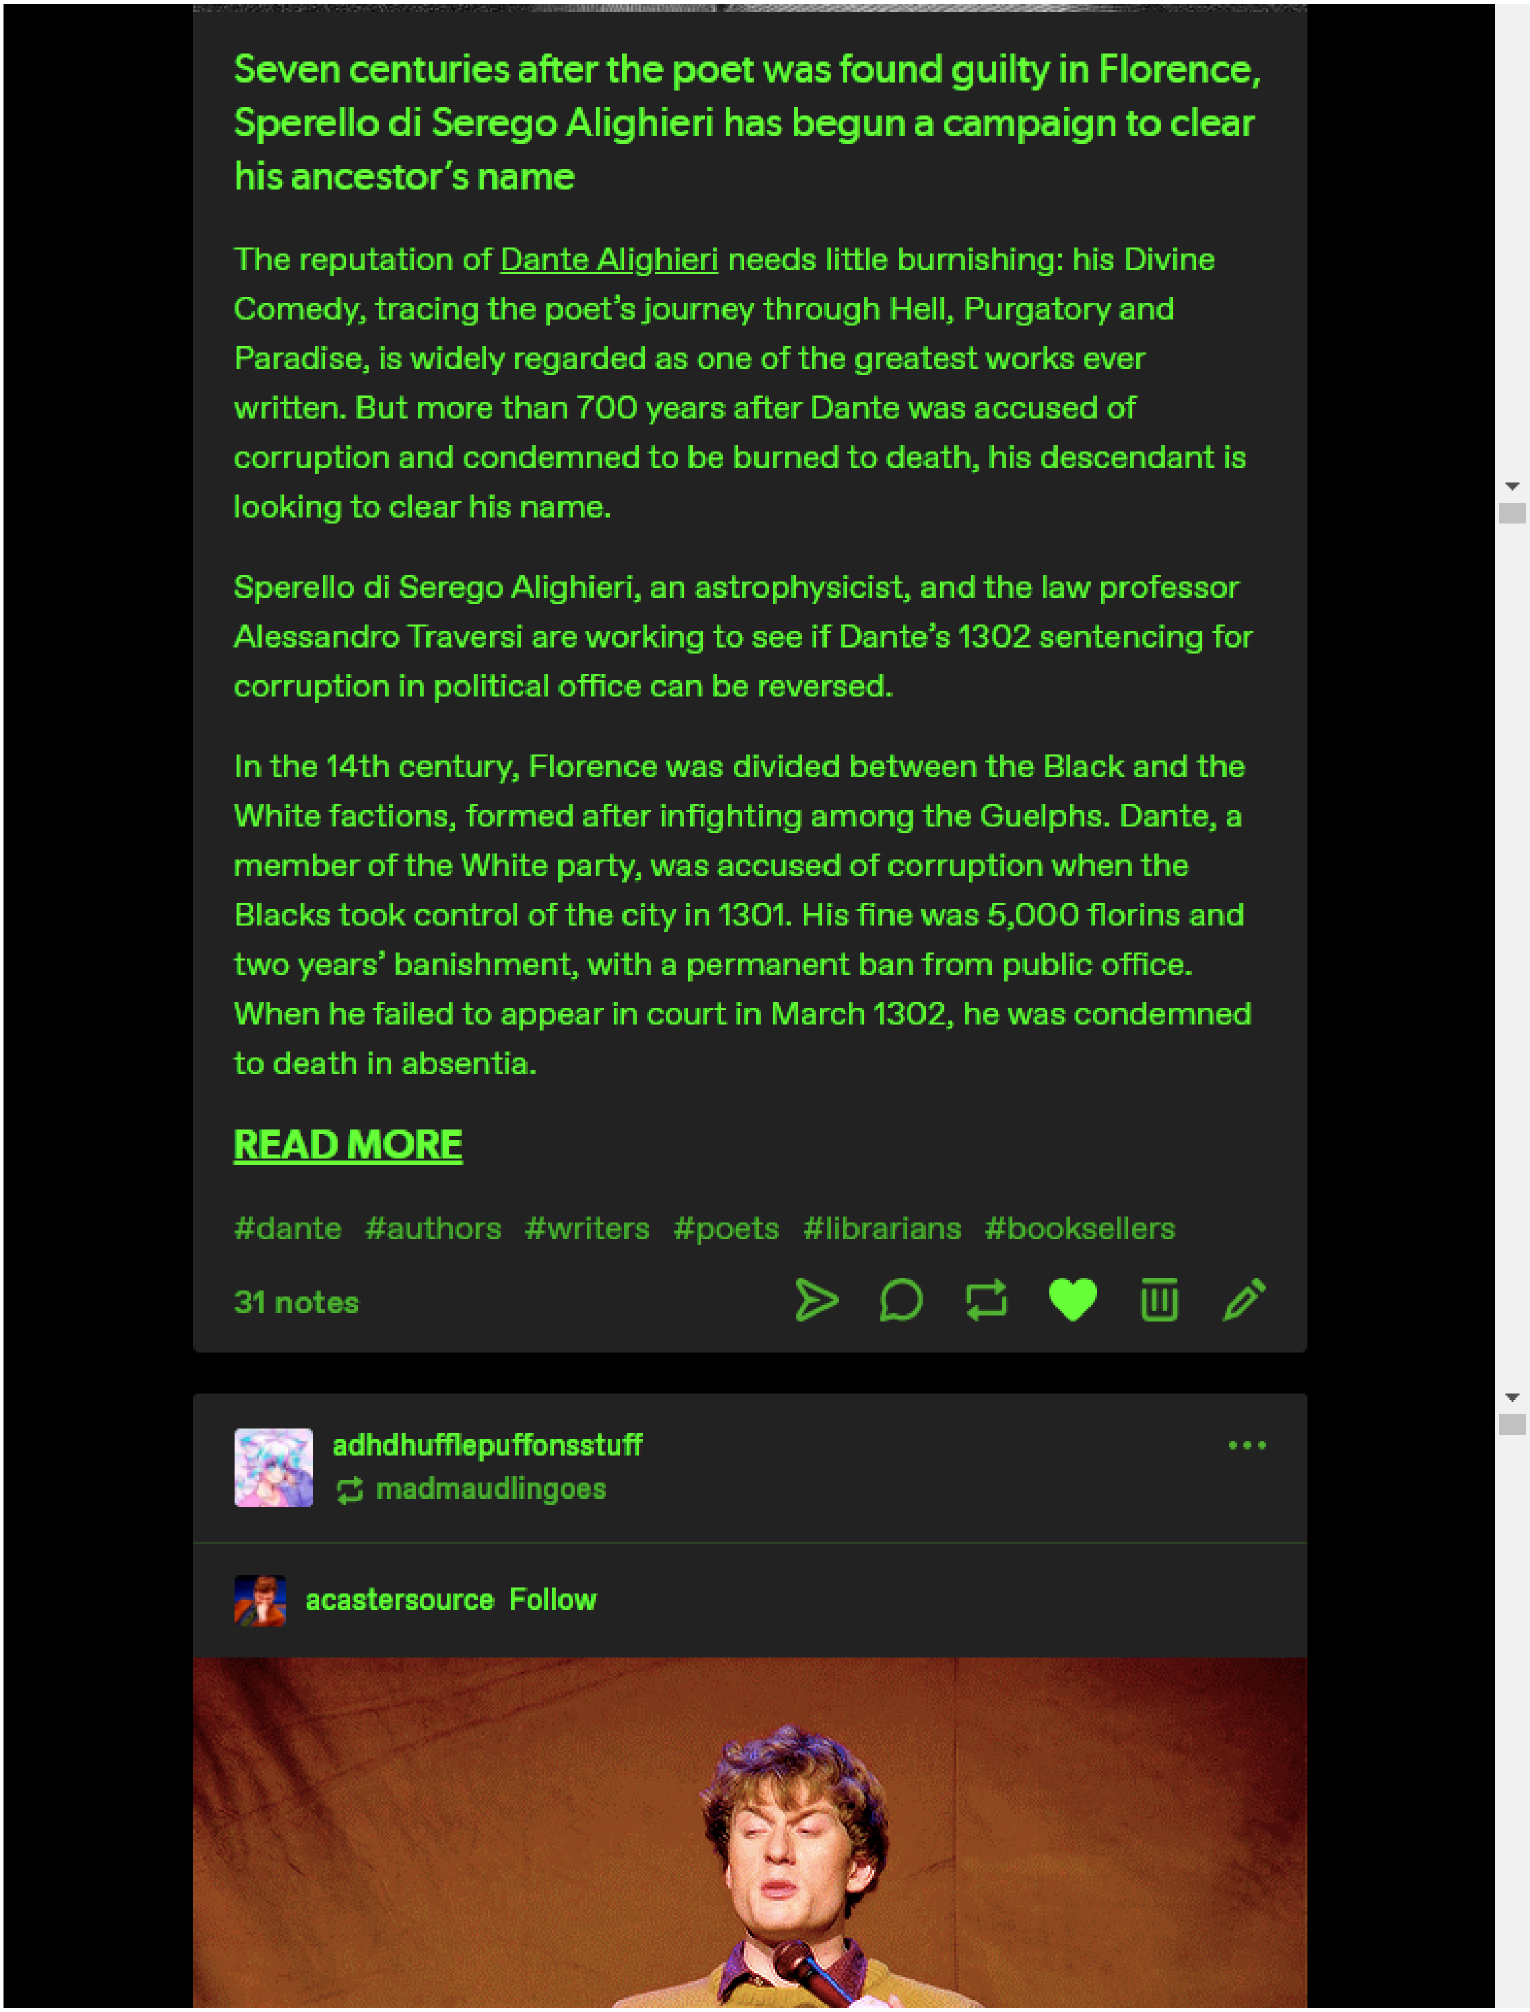
Dante's descendant seeks to overturn poet's 1302 corruption conviction



Seven centuries after the poet was found guilty in Florence, Sperello di Serego Alighieri has begun a campaign to clear his ancestor's name

The reputation of Dante Alighieri needs little burnishing: his Divine Comedy, tracing the poet's journey through Hell, Purgatory and Paradise, is widely regarded as one of the greatest works ever written. But more than 700 years after Dante was accused of corruption and condemned to be burned to death, his descendant is looking to clear his name.

Sperello di Serego Alighieri, an astrophysicist, and the law professor Alessandro Traversi are working to see if Dante's 1302 sentencing for corruption in political office can be reversed.

In the 14th century, Florence was divided between the Black and the White factions, formed after infighting among the Guelphs. Dante, a member of the White party, was accused of corruption when the Blacks took control of the city in 1301. His fine was 5,000 florins and two years' banishment, with a permanent ban from public office. When he failed to appear in court in March 1302, he was condemned to death in absentia.

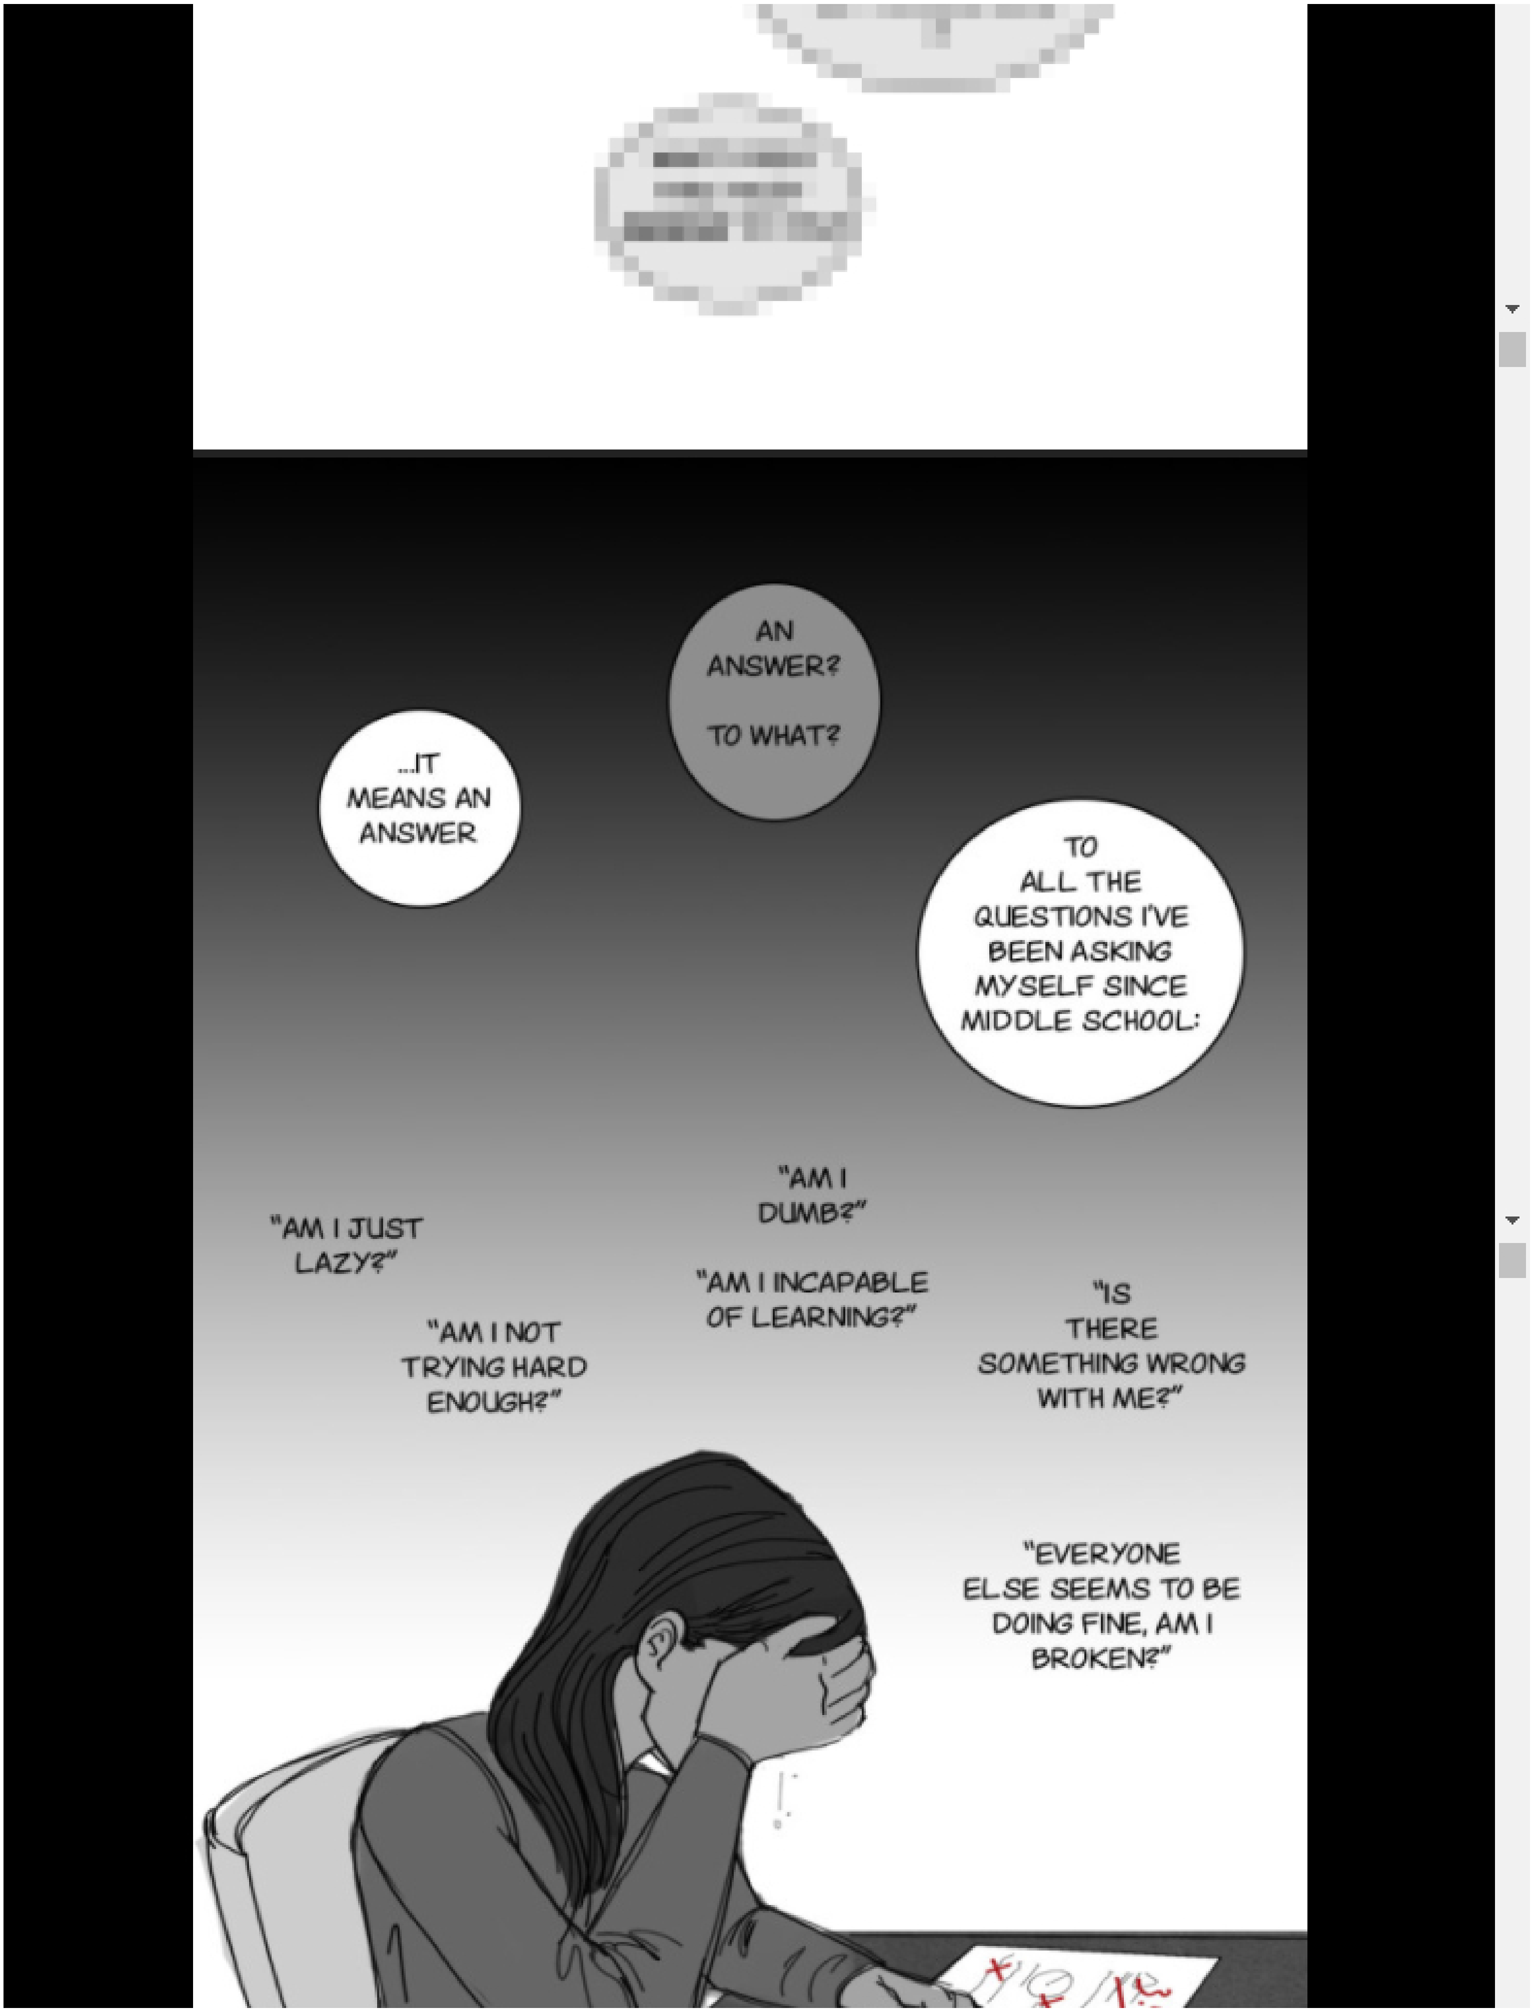
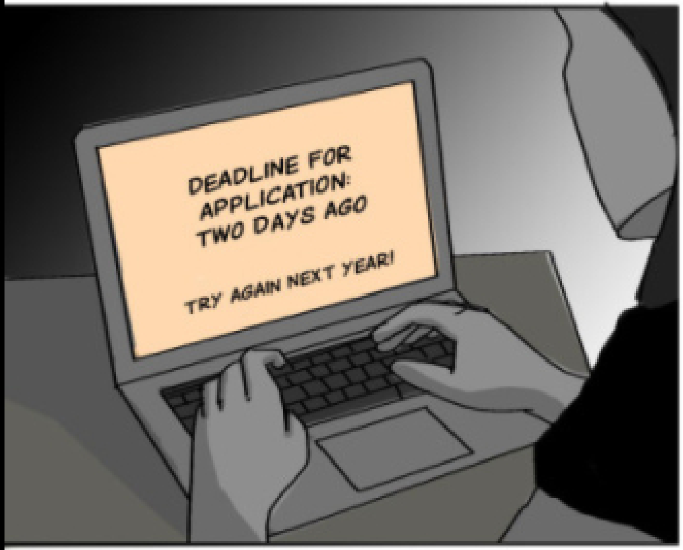
I WOULD ARGUE THAT ACTUALLY, THERE IS ALWAYS A REASON FOR ANXIETY, AS WE'VE SEEN ON PAST ISSUES.
SO HOW ABOUT WE



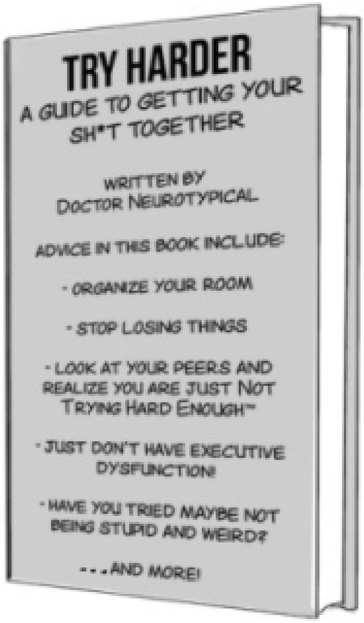
...IT MEANS AN ANSWER
AN ANSWER? TO WHAT?
TO ALL THE QUESTIONS I'VE BEEN ASKING MYSELF SINCE MIDDLE SCHOOL:
"AM I JUST LAZY?"
"AM I DUMB?"
"AM I NOT TRYING HARD ENOUGH?"
"AM I INCAPABLE OF LEARNING?"
"IS THERE SOMETHING WRONG WITH ME?"
"EVERYONE ELSE SEEMS TO BE DOING FINE, AM I BROKEN?"

IT'S JUST THAT... I'M SO SICK AND TIRED OF THESE REPETITIVE, DAMAGING BEHAVIORS THAT HAVE COST ME FINANCIALLY AND EMOTIONALLY...
LOST STUFF



DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION: TWO DAYS AGO
TRY AGAIN NEXT YEAR!

BEHAVIORS THAT HAVE ALSO COST ME MY GRADES, MY CARREER AND MY RELATIONSHIPS, AND I THINK THAT IF I GET A DIAGNOSIS,



TRY HARDER
A GUIDE TO GETTING YOUR SH*T TOGETHER
WRITTEN BY DOCTOR NEUROTYPICAL ADVICE IN THIS BOOK INCLUDE:
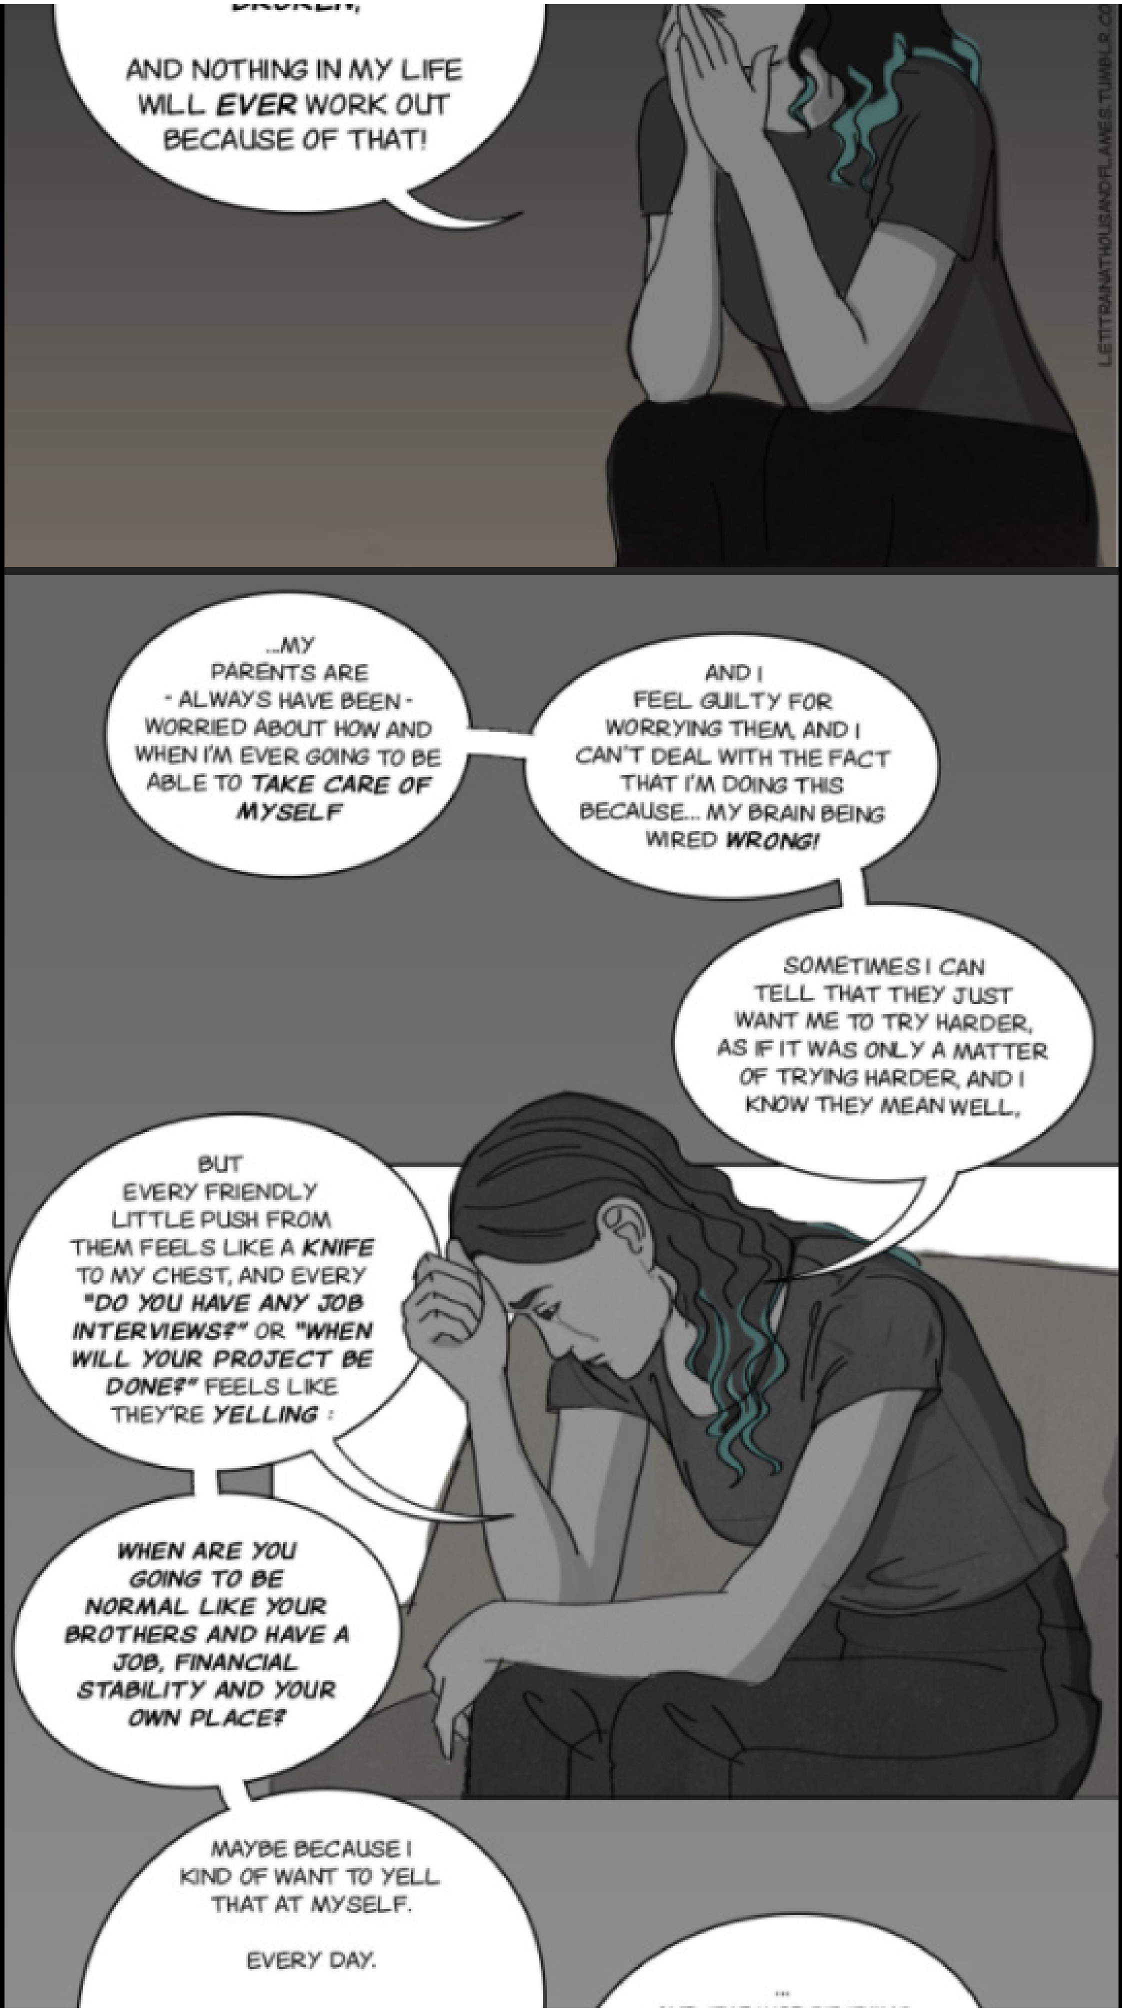
- ORGANIZE YOUR ROOM
- STOP LOSING THINGS
- LOOK AT YOUR PEERS AND REALIZE YOU ARE JUST NOT TRYING HARD ENOUGH™
- JUST DON'T HAVE EXECUTIVE DYSFUNCTION!
- HAVE YOU TRIED MAYBE NOT BEING STUPID AND WEIRD?
...AND MORE!

...THEN MAYBE I COULD LEARN SOME ACTUAL COPING MECHANISMS TO MAKE MY LIFE EASIER AND MY... PARTICULARITIES LESS BURDENING.

SOMETHING AIMED SPECIFICALLY FOR MY NEEDS, NOT SOME GENERICAL ~POSITIVE~ TALK THAT BASICALLY JUST TELLS ME TO STOP HAVING SYMPTOMS!

I SEE...
SO GETTING THE DIAGNOSIS IS A GOOD THING, RIGHT?
I... I DON'T KNOW...
IF THE DIAGNOSIS IS POSITIVE FOR EITHER ADHD OR AUTISM, IT ALSO MEANS...
THAT-
THAT I'M NOT NORMAL
THAT I CAN'T LIVE ON MY OWN, THAT I NEED HELP, THAT I'M INCAPABLE OF TAKING CARE OF MYSELF AND-
AND THAT I'M DISABLED, DYSFUNCTIONAL AND BROKEN



BROKEN,
AND NOTHING IN MY LIFE WILL EVER WORK OUT BECAUSE OF THAT!
LETITRAINATHOUSANDFLAMES.TUMBLR.CO
...MY PARENTS ARE - ALWAYS HAVE BEEN - WORRIED ABOUT HOW AND WHEN I'M EVER GOING TO BE ABLE TO TAKE CARE OF MYSELF
AND I FEEL GUILTY FOR WORRYING THEM, AND I CAN'T DEAL WITH THE FACT THAT I'M DOING THIS BECAUSE... MY BRAIN BEING WIRED WRONG!
SOMETIMES I CAN TELL THAT THEY JUST WANT ME TO TRY HARDER, AS IF IT WAS ONLY A MATTER OF TRYING HARDER, AND I KNOW THEY MEAN WELL,
BUT EVERY FRIENDLY LITTLE PUSH FROM THEM FEELS LIKE A KNIFE TO MY CHEST, AND EVERY "DO YOU HAVE ANY JOB INTERVIEWS?" OR "WHEN WILL YOUR PROJECT BE DONE?" FEELS LIKE THEY'RE YELLING :
WHEN ARE YOU GOING TO BE NORMAL LIKE YOUR BROTHERS AND HAVE A JOB, FINANCIAL STABILITY AND YOUR OWN PLACE?
MAYBE BECAUSE I KIND OF WANT TO YELL THAT AT MYSELF.
EVERY DAY.

AND DISAPPOINTING MYSELF IS AWFUL, BUT DISAPPOINTING PEOPLE THAT LOVE ME AND WANT TO SEE ME SUCCEED IS THE WORST!
AND THE WORST THING IS THAT THE POSSIBILITY OF THE DIAGNOSTIC FOR ADHD OR AUTISM BEING POSITIVE ISN'T THE ONLY THING THAT SCARES ME WHAT ELSE SCARES YOU, THEN?
.... THE DIAGNOSTIC BEING ACUTALLY NEGATIVE, AND I DON'T HAVE ADHD OR AUTISM REALLY? EVEN IF THAT MEANT THAT YOU AREN'T... IN YOUR WORDS, "BROKEN"?
I- IT'S... I DON'T.... I DON'T KNOW!
I THINK YOU DO. TAKE YOUR TIME AND THINK.
YOU TOLD ME ALL THE GOOD POSSIBLE OUTCOMES OF GETTING A POSITIVE DIAGNOSIS:
UNDERSTANDING YOUR SCHOOL GRADES, YOUR SHORTCOMINGS AND BEING ABLE TO COPE WITH THE WAY YOUR BRAIN WORKS
AND THE BAD ONES: BEING PERMANENTLY IN NEED OF HELP AND UNABLE TO TAKE CARE OF YOURSELF OR BECOME INDEPENDENT
IT WOULD MAKE SENSE FOR YOU TO WISH FOR THE DIAGNOSIS TO BE NEGATIVE BECAUSE OF THESE CONCERNS
BESIDES, A NEGATIVE WOULD BE JUST A RETURN TO YOUR STATUS QUO
SO WHAT IS IT ABOUT THIS POSSIBILITY THAT WORRIES YOU SO MUCH?
IF THE DIAGNOSIS IS NEGATIVE AND I'M NEITHER AUTISTIC OR ADHD, THAT GETS ME THE BAD ANSWER FOR THOSE QUESTIONS THAT I'VE BEEN ASKING MYSELF
IT MEANS THAT I AM JUST STUPID, LAZY, CARELESS AND DUMB - NO MENTAL DISORDER OR DYSFUNCTION TO I'M DAMNED IF I AM NEURODIVERGENT, AND DAMNED IF I AM NEUROTYPICAL.
THERE'S NO GOOD SOLUTION TO THIS.
NO RIGHT

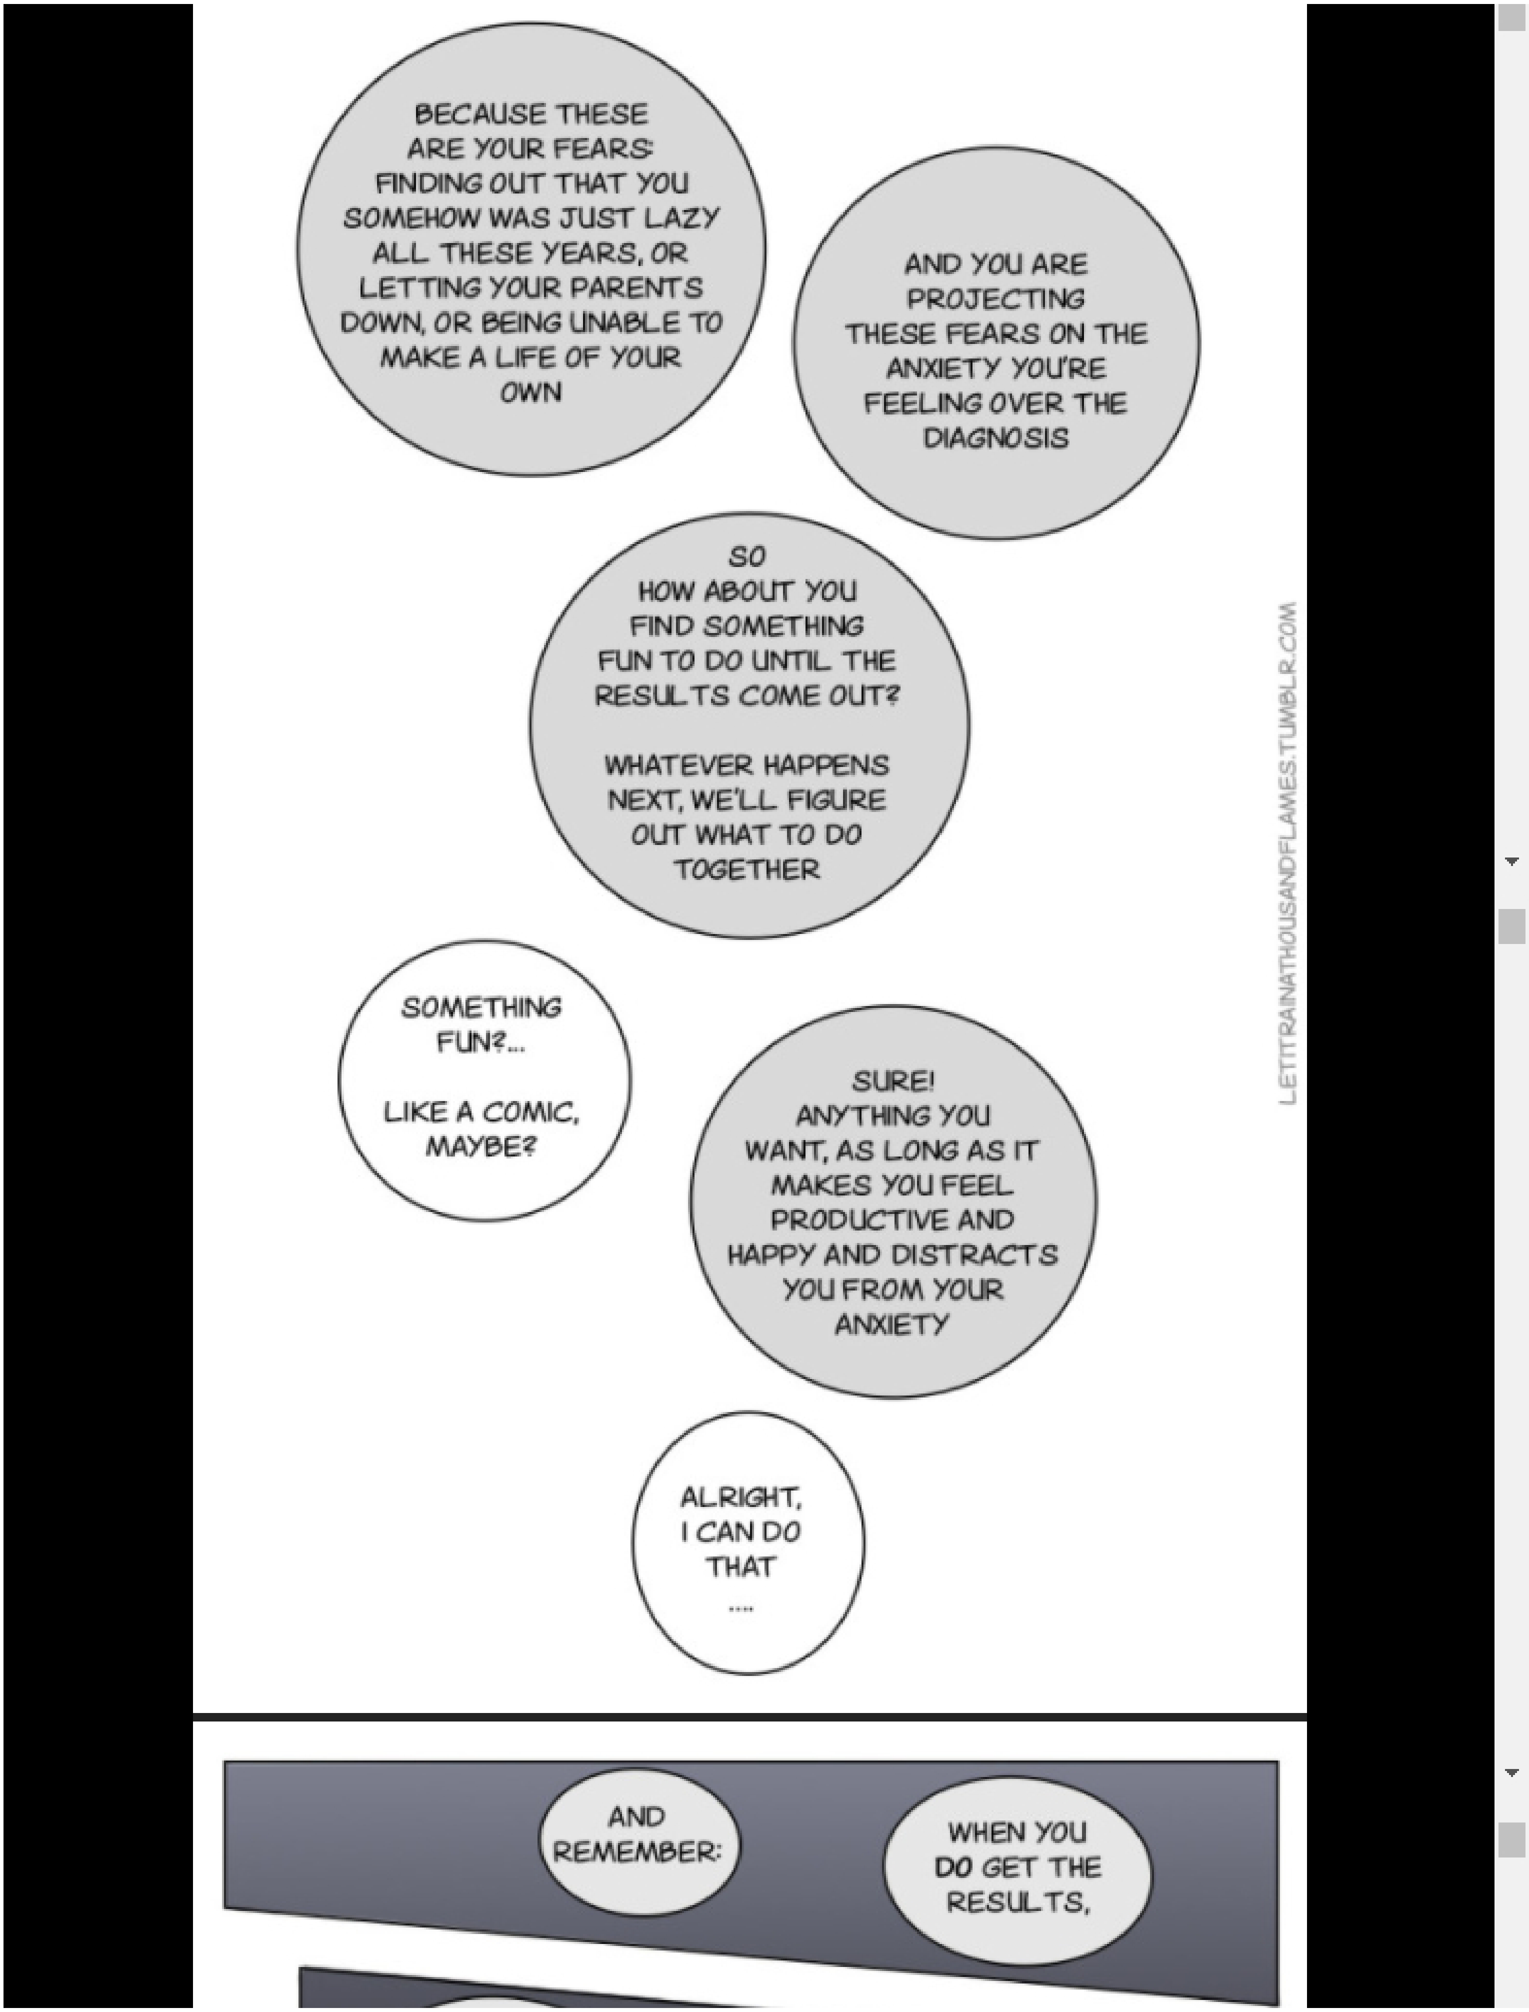
EXPLAIN AWAY MY BEHAVIOR
ANSWER...
IT'S A GOOD THING, THAT YOU ARE LETTING THESE FEELINGS OUT
TAKE YOUR TIME.
THERE'S TISSUES ON THE TABLE NEXT TO YOU.
SNFF
HIC
LETITRAINATHOUSANDFLAMES.TUMBLR.COM
DID YOU NOTICE HOW YOU ARE PROJECTING YOUR ANXIETIES ON A FUTURE YOU DON'T EVEN KNOW YET?
AND DO YOU REMEMBER HOW WE MADE A DEAL OF BEING MORE AWARE OF THIS BAD HABIT?
YOU DON'T KNOW THE RESULTS AND PANICKING OVER THEM WON'T CHANGE A THING ABOUT THEM, IT WILL ONLY HURT YOU



BECAUSE THESE ARE YOUR FEARS: FINDING OUT THAT YOU SOMEHOW WAS JUST LAZY ALL THESE YEARS, OR LETTING YOUR PARENTS DOWN, OR BEING UNABLE TO MAKE A LIFE OF YOUR OWN
AND YOU ARE PROJECTING THESE FEARS ON THE ANXIETY YOU'RE FEELING OVER THE DIAGNOSIS
SO HOW ABOUT YOU FIND SOMETHING FUN TO DO UNTIL THE RESULTS COME OUT?
WHATEVER HAPPENS NEXT, WE'LL FIGURE OUT WHAT TO DO TOGETHER SOMETHING FUN?...
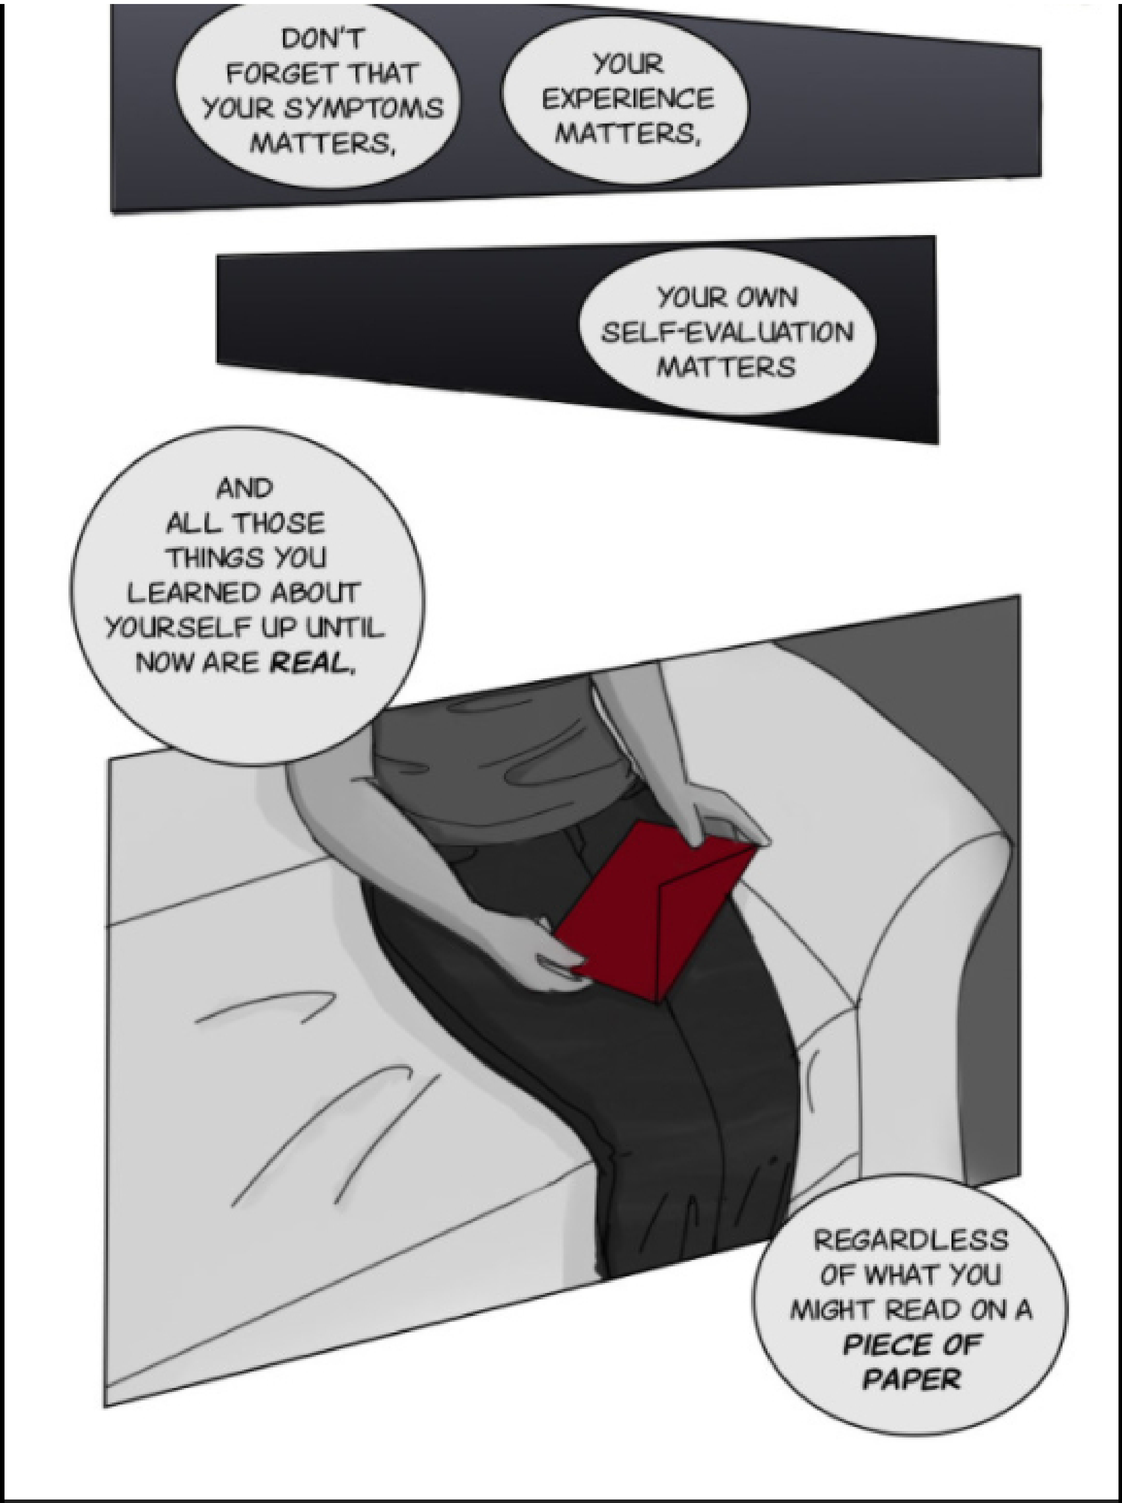
LIKE A COMIC, MAYBE?
SURE! ANYTHING YOU WANT, AS LONG AS IT MAKES YOU FEEL PRODUCTIVE AND HAPPY AND DISTRACTS YOU FROM YOUR ANXIETY
ALRIGHT, I CAN DO THAT ....
LETITRAINATHOUSANDFLAMES.TUMBLR.COM
AND REMEMBER:
WHEN YOU DO GET THE RESULTS,



DON'T FORGET THAT YOUR SYMPTOMS MATTERS,
YOUR EXPERIENCE MATTERS,
YOUR OWN SELF-EVALUATION MATTERS
AND ALL THOSE THINGS YOU LEARNED ABOUT YOURSELF UP UNTIL NOW ARE REAL, REGARDLESS OF WHAT YOU MIGHT READ ON A PIECE OF PAPER

BY THE TIME I FINISHED THIS COMIC, I WAS STILL WAITING FOR THE RESULTS OF MY TEST, BUT I WANTED TO POST THE COMIC ON TIME FOR THE #ADHDINVASION ON TUMBLR.

MAYBE IT'S MEANT TO BE THIS WAY. MAYBE THIS IS MEANT TO BE A COMIC ABOUT SELF-DIAGNOSIS AND HOW IMPORTANT YOUR EXPERIENCES ARE, AND THAT BEING SELF-DIAGNOSED AND USING COPING MECHANISMS THAT WORK FOR YOU ISN'T "FAKING IT" OR "PRETENDING" TO BE NEURODIVERGENT.

DO WHAT WORKS FOR YOU. FIND WAYS TO MAKE YOUR LIFE EASIER AND MORE COMFORTABLE. NO ONE HAS THE RIGHT TO JUDGE YOU FOR TRYING TO FIND YOUR OWN HAPPINESS.

I WOULD LIKE TO TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO THANK ALL THE ARTISTS WORKING ON THIS BEAUTIFUL PROJECT, ESPECIALLY ADHDALIEN, WHOSE COMICS MAKE ME VERY HAPPY.

Saw your post while skimming through the reblog and did not see an answer, so for accessibility! Hozier is singing the following:

Of all the money that e'er I had / I spend it in good company

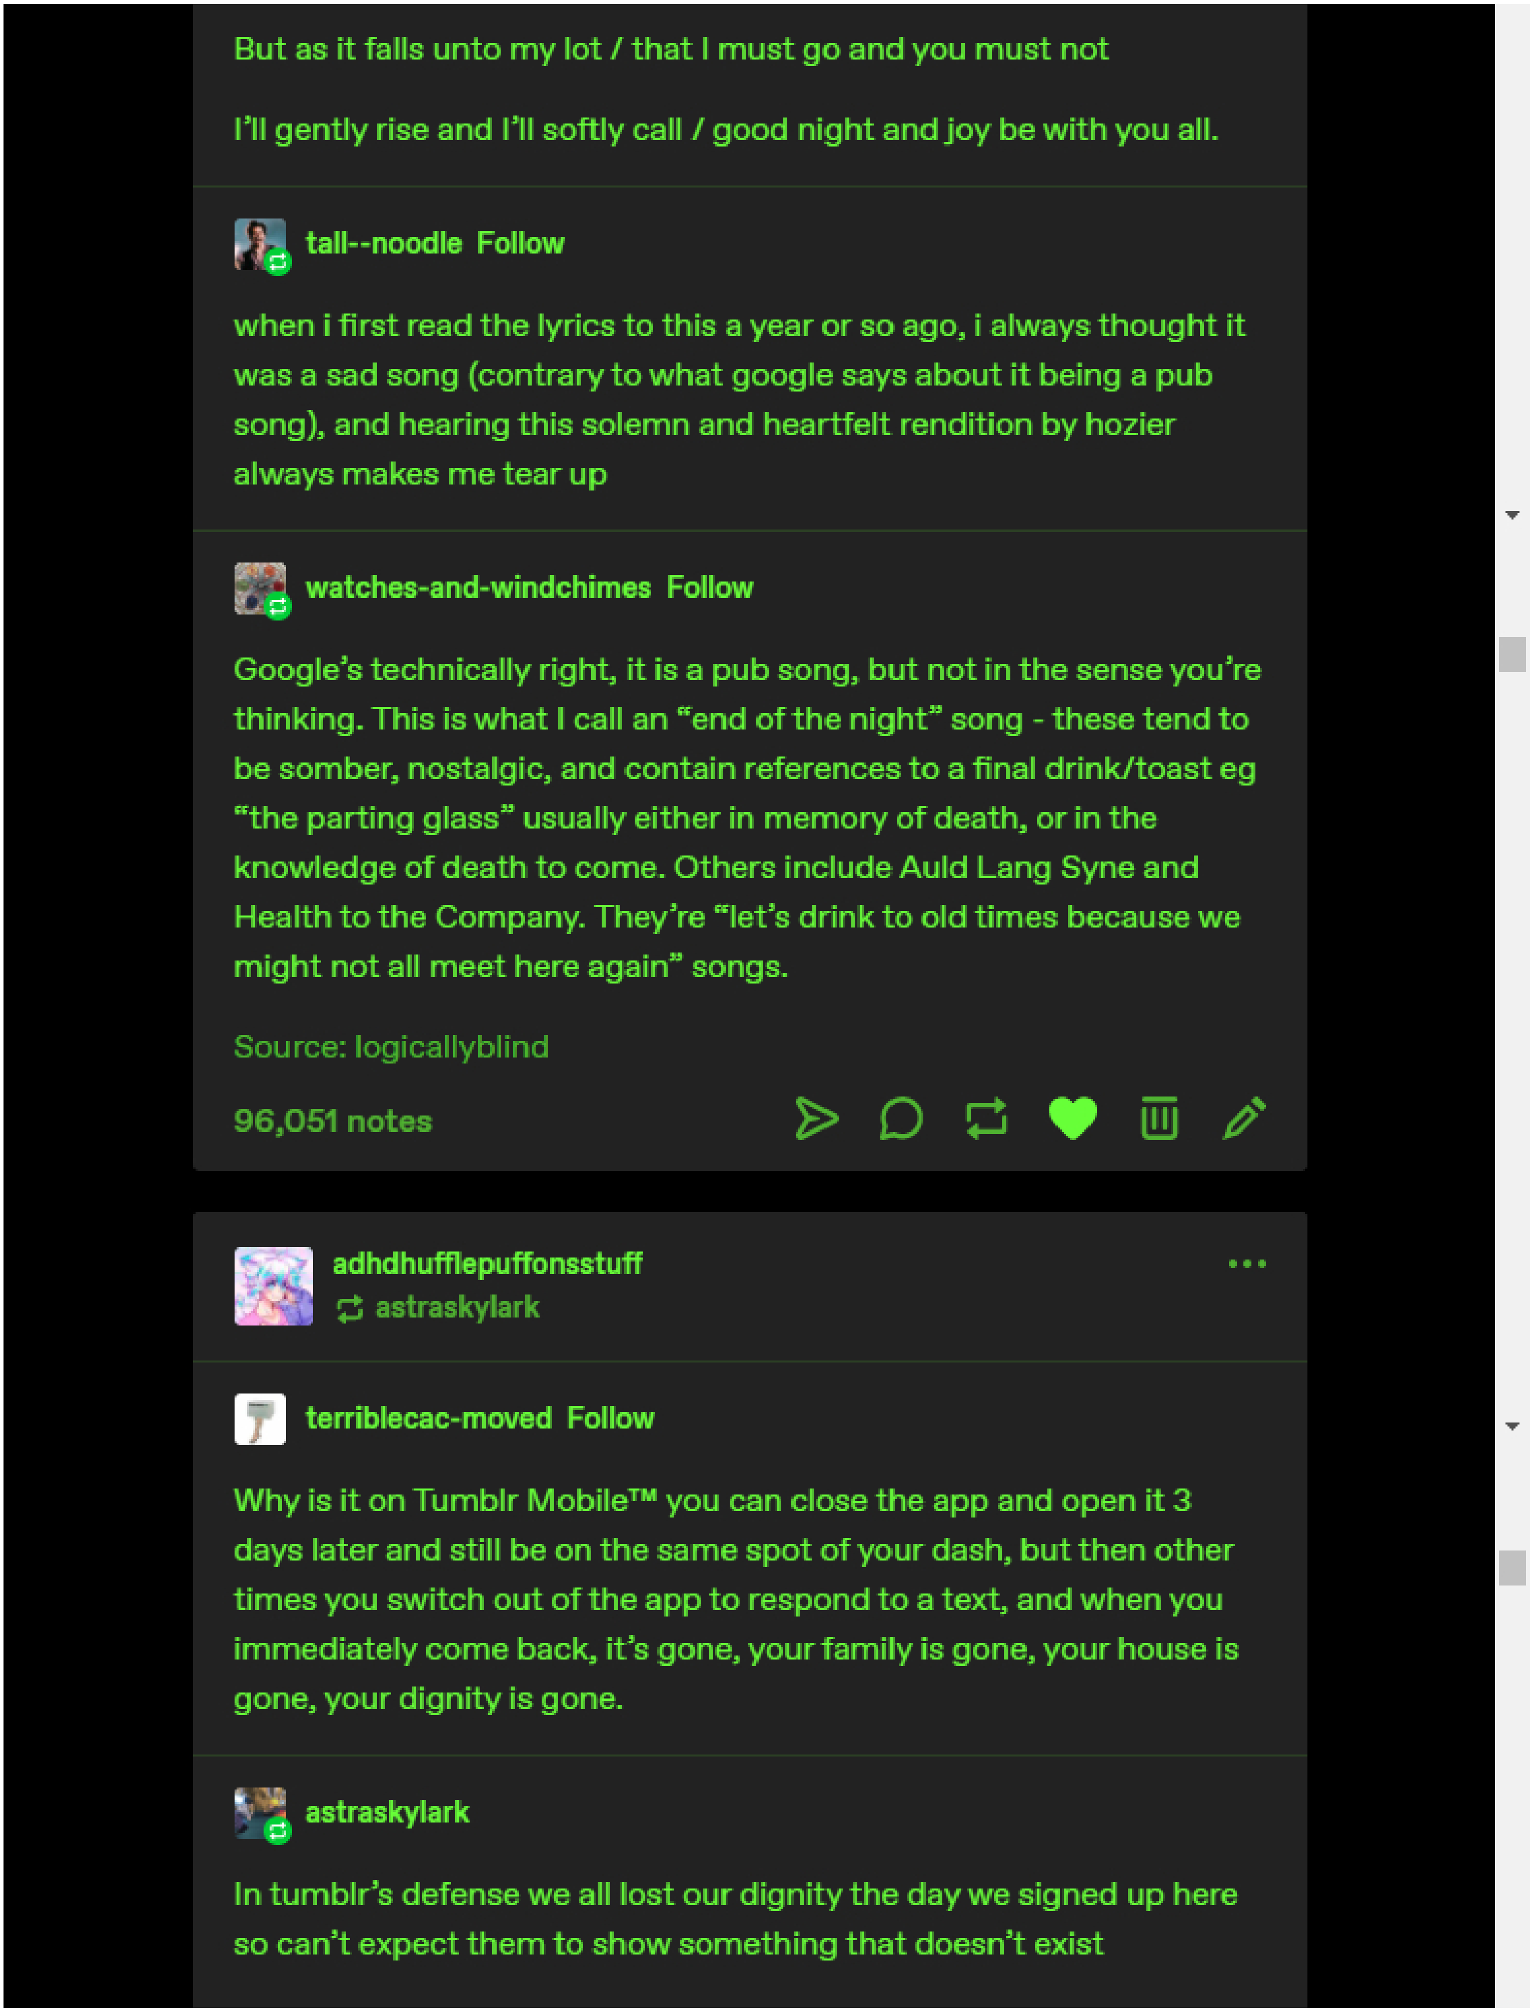
And of all the harm that e'er I done / Alas it was to none but me

For all I've done for want of wit / to memory now I can't recall

So fill to me the parting glass / good night and joy be with you all.

Of all the comrades that e'er I had / they're sorry for my going away

And of all the sweethearts that e'er I had / they'd wish me one more day to stay



But as it falls unto my lot / that I must go and you must not

I'll gently rise and I'll softly call / good night and joy be with you all.

when i first read the lyrics to this a year or so ago, i always thought it was a sad song (contrary to what google says about it being a pub song), and hearing this solemn and heartfelt rendition by hozier always makes me tear up watches-and-windchimes Follow

Google's technically right, it is a pub song, but not in the sense you're thinking. This is what I call an "end of the night" song - these tend to be somber, nostalgic, and contain references to a final drink/toast eg "the parting glass" usually either in memory of death, or in the knowledge of death to come. Others include Auld Lang Syne and Health to the Company. They're "let's drink to old times because we might not all meet here again" songs.

This. This is why you should have separate bank accounts.

Liam Blake

Can I get some advice from you ladies and men? I control all the money and even get a text when money is spent. My wife does not have a bank card nor is she on my account. She took out $100 yesterday while she had the card to go grocery shopping. I got very upset with her and I am not speaking to her right now. She should have asked my permission and told me why she needed the money. She told me it was for my Christmas surprise from her and the kids only after I demanded an explanation. I told her she was not allowed to ever have access to the bank card again and that I would take over the grocery shopping or give her cash to go. Do you think I was unfair or right? Imo.. women are impulsive and do not know how to budget money.

8:55 AM - 15 Dec 2019

in charge of the girls

this is financial abuse. not having access to money is the #1 reason our grandmothers stayed in relationships with men that treated them terribly. why would you not want the mother of your kids to have access to money? kids have emergencies all the time!

This right here is a HUGE red fucking flag. If you're in a relationship with someone who wants complete control over finances, especially to the point where you don't even have access to money, this is an attempt to control and isolate. They will use ALL sorts of excuses. "I'm better with money" "You spend too much" "You're too impulsive" etc. It has nothing to do with looking out for you or money. It's straight up abuse and will likely lead to worse.

whereintheworldiskamalakhan Follow

Also, women need to be independent in every way they can. And they also need to know what's going on with their finances, even if their husband makes all the decisions or whatever bs goes on. Because (true story), one day that husband could die and you'll find out that you're in a crazy amount of debt that you never knew about because he didn't tell you shit and that gets to be a lovely surprise after the funeral.

dancinbutterfly Follow

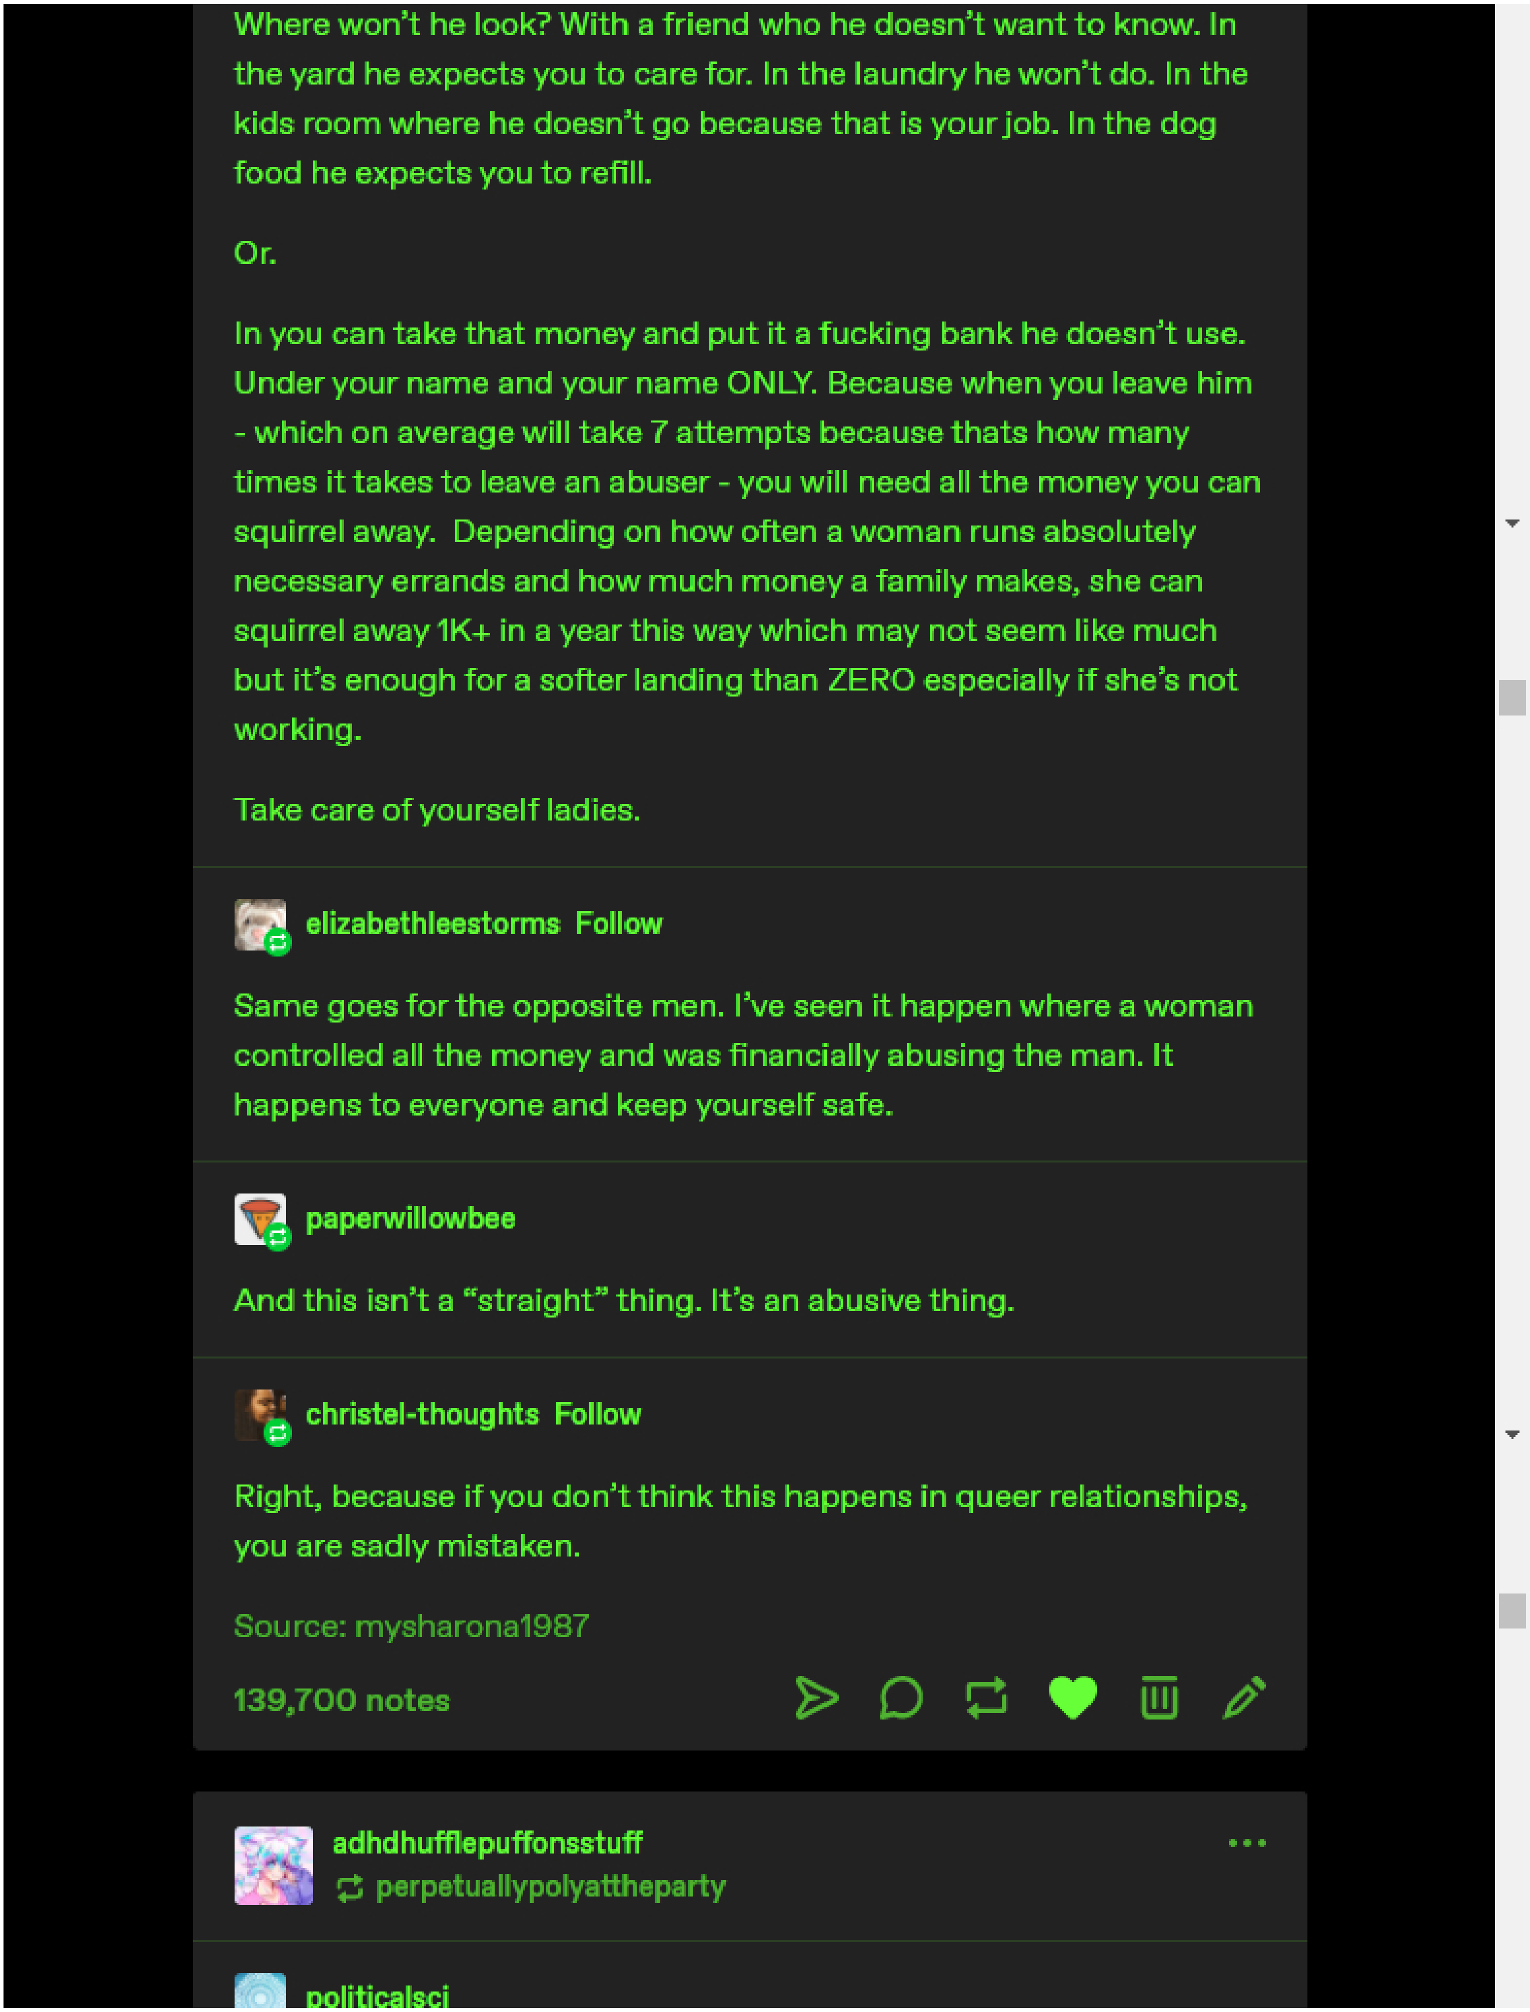
Women should ABSOLUTELY be independent and you should ABSOLUTELY keep your banking separate.

HOWEVER!

If you are in that circumstance?

Grocery shopping and gas stations and big box stores are your BEST friend. I know we're in a pandemic but put on an N-95 and go. Use your debit card every time and take out 20-40 dollars each time you shop for these sorts of things because that doesn't read as a withdrawal. It counts as part of the shopping. Women have been doing this for GENERATIONS now. My mother did it when my father was financially abusing her and she taught me and now? I pas this on to you.

Take your 20-40 dollars a trip and put the cash somewhere he won't look.



Where won't he look? With a friend who he doesn't want to know. In the yard he expects you to care for. In the laundry he won't do. In the kids room where he doesn't go because that is your job. In the dog food he expects you to refill.

Or.

In you can take that money and put it a fucking bank he doesn't use. Under your name and your name ONLY. Because when you leave him - which on average will take 7 attempts because thats how many times it takes to leave an abuser - you will need all the money you can squirrel away. Depending on how often a woman runs absolutely necessary errands and how much money a family makes, she can squirrel away 1K+ in a year this way which may not seem like much but it's enough for a softer landing than ZERO especially if she's not working.

Take care of yourself ladies.

elizabethleestorms Follow

Same goes for the opposite men. I've seen it happen where a woman controlled all the money and was financially abusing the man. It happens to everyone and keep yourself safe.

paperwillowbee

And this isn't a "straight" thing. It's an abusive thing.

Whgskl. Okay.

PSA to all you fantasy writers because I have just had a truly frustrating twenty minutes talking to someone about this: it's okay to put mobility aids in your novel and have them just be ordinary.

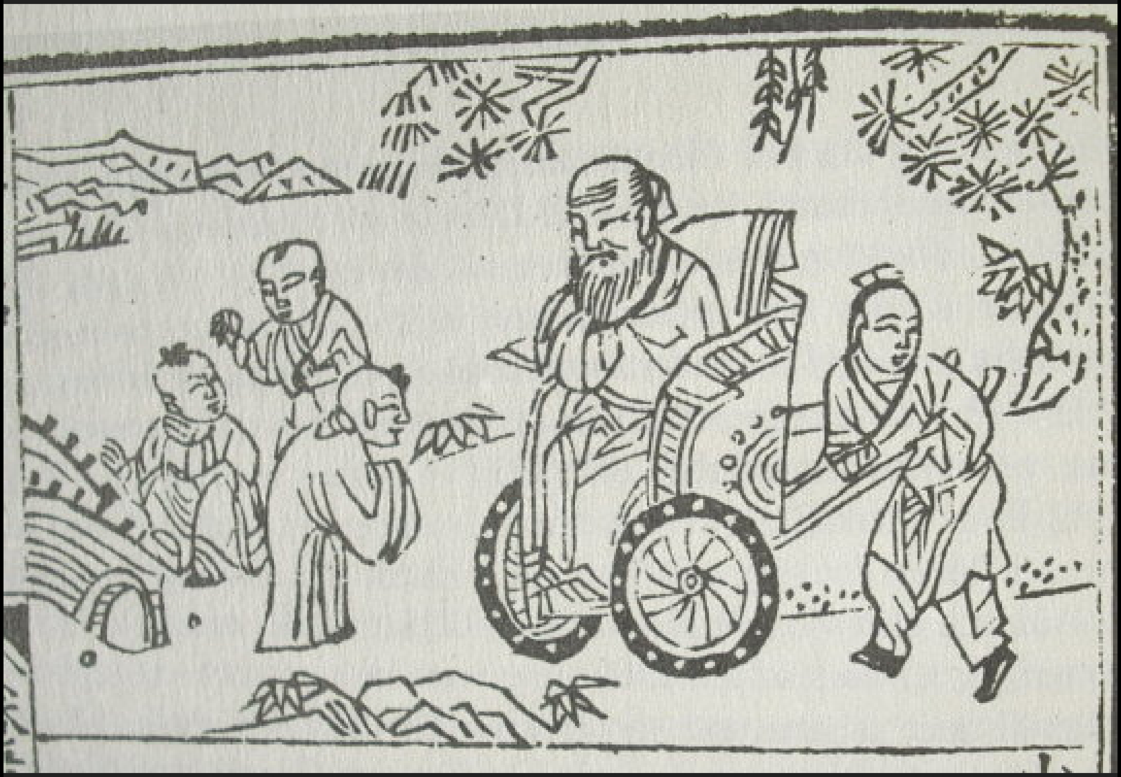
Like. Super okay.

I don't give a shit if it's high fantasy, low fantasy or somewhere between the lovechild of Tolkein meets My Immortal. It's okay to use mobility devices in your narrative. It's okay to use the word "wheelchair". You don't have to remake the fucking wheel. It's already been done for you.

And no, it doesn't detract from the "realism" of your fictional universe in which you get to set the standard for realism. Please don't try to use that as a reason for not using these things.

There is no reason to lock the disabled people in your narrative into towers because "that's the way it was", least of all in your novel about dragons and mermaids and other made up creatures. There is no historical realism here. You are in charge. You get to decide what that means.

Also:



"Depiction of Chinese philosopher Confucius in a wheelchair, dating to ca. 1680. The artist may have been thinking of methods of transport common in his own day."

> "The earliest records of wheeled furniture are an inscription found > on a stone slate in China and a child's bed depicted in a frieze on a Greek vase, both dating between the 6th and 5th century BCE.[2][3][4][5]The first records of wheeled seats being used for transporting disabled people date to three centuries later in China; the Chinese used early wheelbarrows to move people as well as heavy objects. A distinction between the two functions was not made for another several hundred years, around 525 CE, when images of wheeled chairs made specifically to carry people begin to occur in Chinese art.[5]"

> "In 1655, Stephan Farffler, a 22 year old paraplegic watchmaker, built the world's first self-propelling chair on a three-wheel chassis using a system of cranks and cogwheels.[6][3] However, the device had an appearance of a hand bike more than a wheelchair since the design included hand cranks mounted at the front wheel.[2]
>
> The invalid carriage or Bath chair brought the technology into more common use from around 1760.[7]
>
> In 1887, wheelchairs ("rolling chairs") were introduced to Atlantic City so invalid tourists could rent them to enjoy the Boardwalk. Soon, many healthy tourists also rented the decorated "rolling chairs" and servants to push them as a show of decadence and treatment they could never experience at home.[8]
> In 1933 Harry C. Jennings, Sr. and his disabled friend Herbert Everest, both mechanical engineers, invented the first lightweight, steel, folding, portable wheelchair.[9] Everest had previously broken his back in a mining accident. Everest and Jennings saw the business potential of the invention and went on to become the first mass-market manufacturers of wheelchairs. Their "X-brace" design is still in common use, albeit with updated materials and other improvements. The X-brace idea came to Harry from the men's folding "camp chairs / stools", rotated 90 degrees, that Harry and Herbert used in the outdoors and at the mines.[citation needed]

"But Joy, how do I describe this contraption in a fantasy setting that wont make it seem out of place?"

"It was a chair on wheels, which Prince FancyPants McElferson propelled forwards using his arms to direct the motion of the chair.”

“It was a chair on wheels, which Prince EvenFancierPants McElferson used to get about, pushed along by one of his companions or one of his many attending servants.”

“But it’s a high realm magical fantas—”

“It was a floating chair, the hum of magical energy keeping it off the ground casting a faint glow against the cobblestones as {CHARACTER} guided it round with expert ease, gliding back and forth.”

“But it’s a stempunk nov—”

“Unlike other wheelchairs he’d seen before, this one appeared to be self propelling, powered by the gasket of steam at the back, and directed by the use of a rudder like toggle in the front.”

Give. Disabled. Characters. In. Fantasy. Novels. Mobility. Aids.

If you can spend 60 pages telling me the history of your world in innate detail down to the formation of how magical rocks were formed, you can god damn write three lines in passing about a wheelchair.

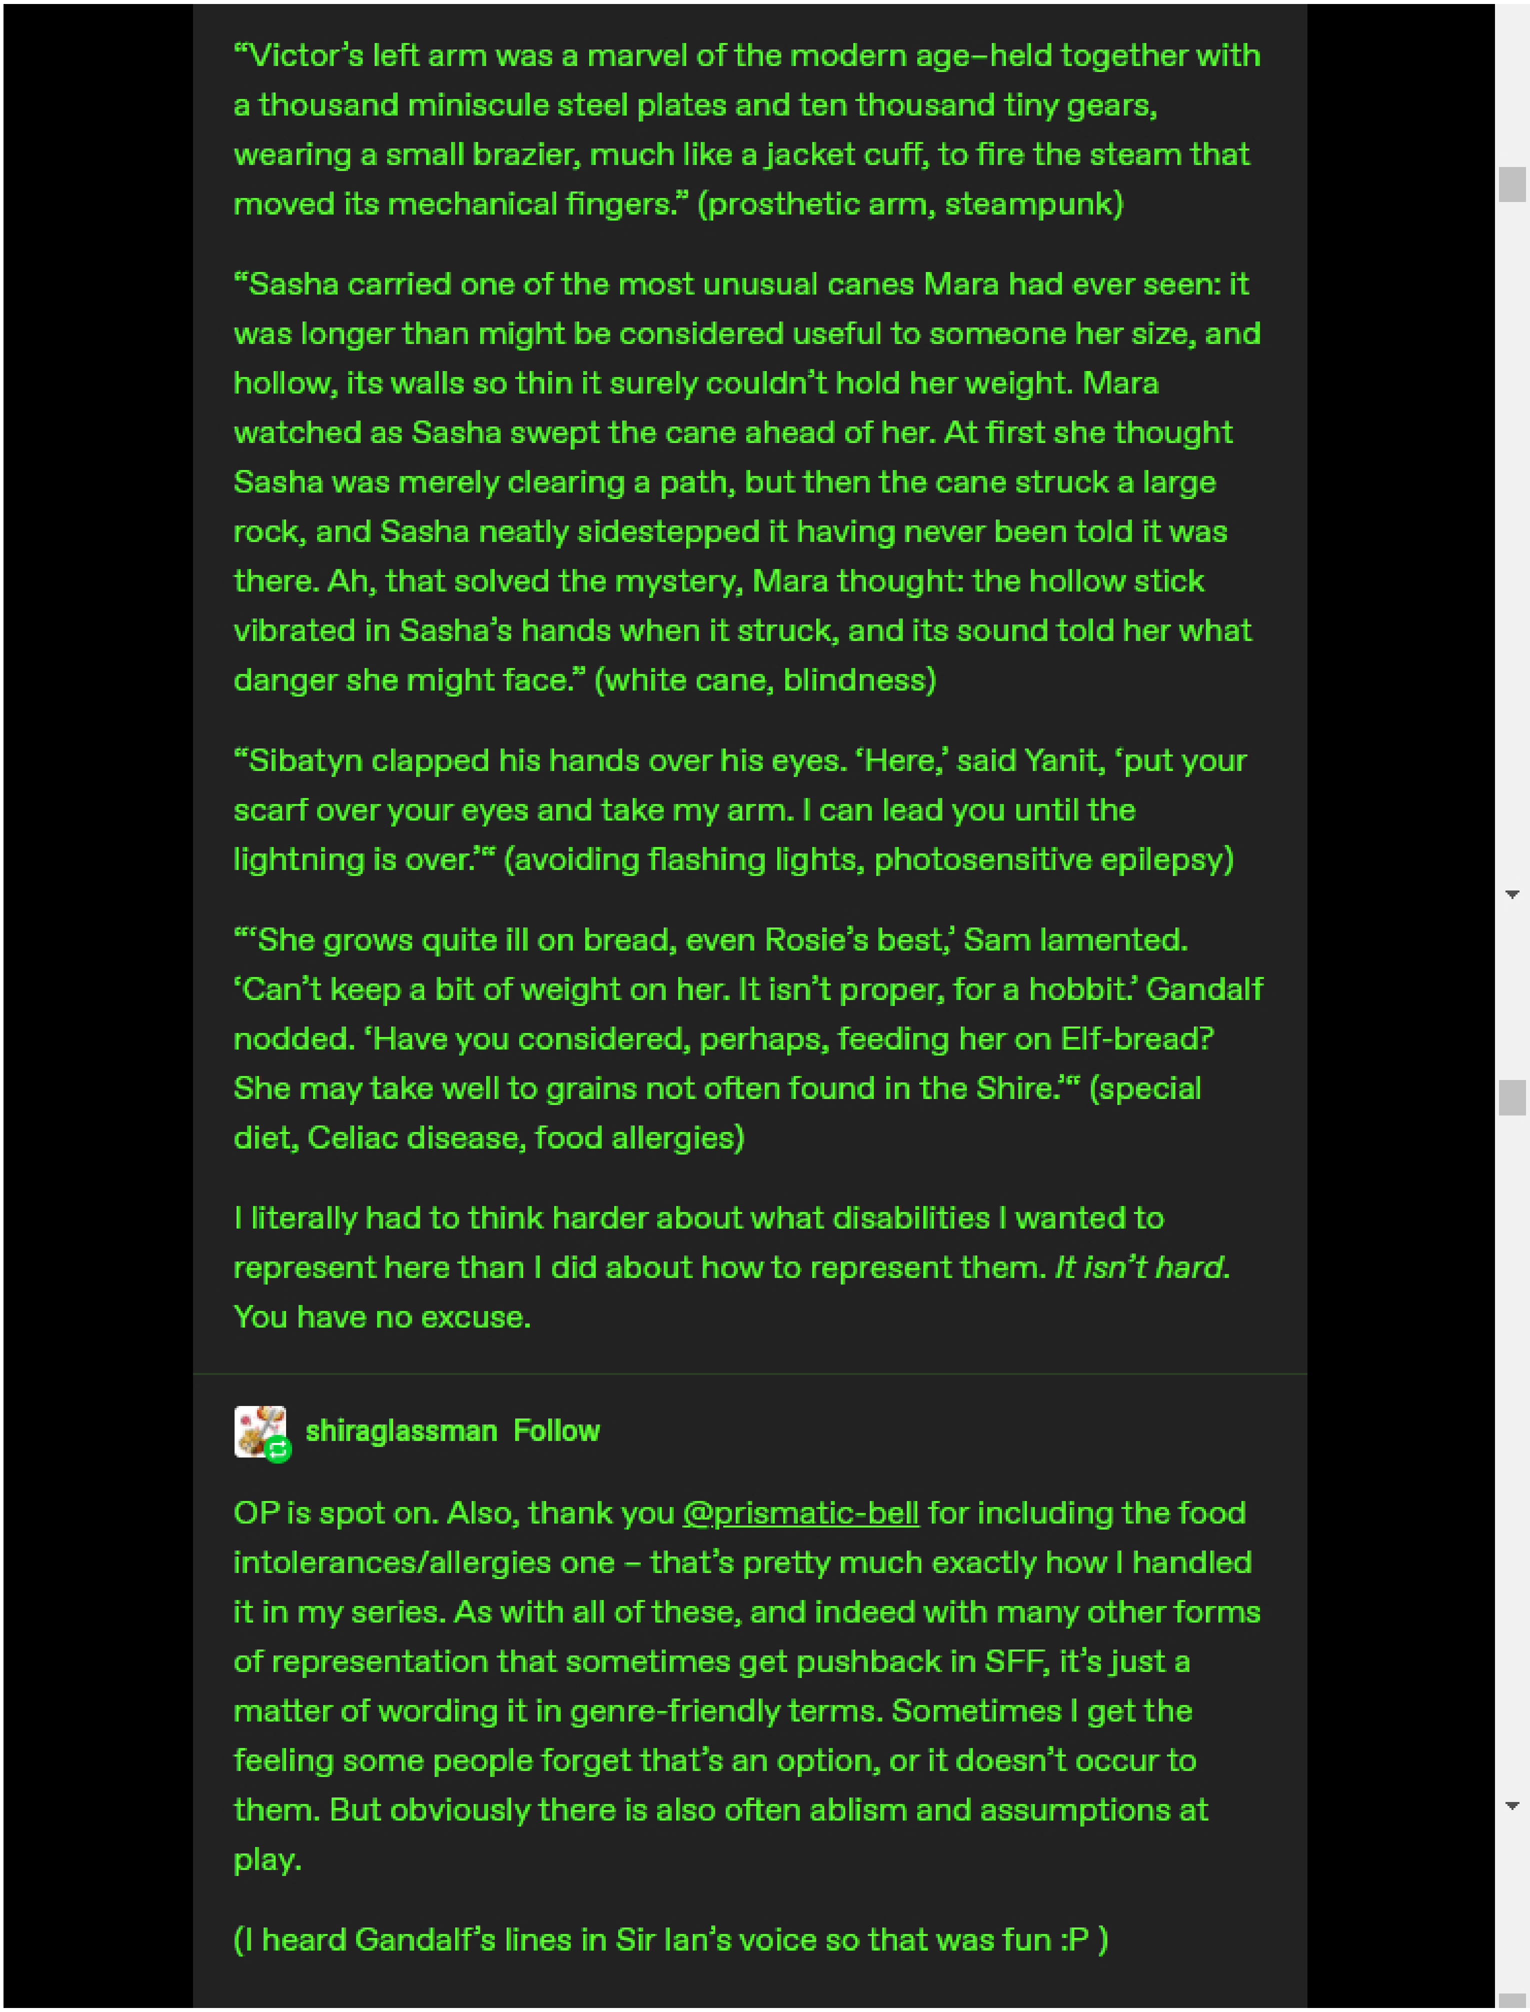
Signed, your editor who doesn’t have time for this ableist fantasy realm shit.

prismatic-bell

Some options for other disabilities and aids:

“Jack had an unusual pair of sticks, unlike anything Jill had seen before; they were much like canes, but rather than ending in a knot or handle they continued up into a pair of bracelets, held together round his wrists by a cunning slide mechanism. They kept him, she noted, quite sure of foot even on the steep ground.” (wrist braces; cerebral palsy)

“Fandir wore a ring around her ear. It looked something like a fancy collar, its edges tipped outward as though forming a funnel, and when she was spoken to she turned it in the direction of the speaker.” (hearing aid, based off antique “hearing trumpets”)



“Victor’s left arm was a marvel of the modern age–held together with a thousand miniscule steel plates and ten thousand tiny gears, wearing a small brazier, much like a jacket cuff, to fire the steam that moved its mechanical fingers.” (prosthetic arm, steampunk)

“Sasha carried one of the most unusual canes Mara had ever seen: it was longer than might be considered useful to someone her size, and hollow, its walls so thin it surely couldn’t hold her weight. Mara watched as Sasha swept the cane ahead of her. At first she thought Sasha was merely clearing a path, but then the cane struck a large rock, and Sasha neatly sidestepped it having never been told it was there. Ah, that solved the mystery, Mara thought: the hollow stick vibrated in Sasha’s hands when it struck, and its sound told her what danger she might face.” (white cane, blindness)

“Sibatyn clapped his hands over his eyes. ‘Here,’ said Yanit, ‘put your scarf over your eyes and take my arm. I can lead you until the lightning is over.’“ (avoiding flashing lights, photosensitive epilepsy)

“‘She grows quite ill on bread, even Rosie’s best,’ Sam lamented. ‘Can’t keep a bit of weight on her. It isn’t proper, for a hobbit.’ Gandalf nodded. ‘Have you considered, perhaps, feeding her on Elf-bread? She may take well to grains not often found in the Shire.’“ (special diet, Celiac disease, food allergies)

I literally had to think harder about what disabilities I wanted to represent here than I did about how to represent them. It isn’t hard. You have no excuse.

OP is spot on. Also, thank you @prismatic-bell for including the food intolerances/allergies one – that’s pretty much exactly how I handled it in my series. As with all of these, and indeed with many other forms of representation that sometimes get pushback in SFF, it’s just a matter of wording it in genre-friendly terms. Sometimes I get the feeling some people forget that’s an option, or it doesn’t occur to them. But obviously there is also often ablism and assumptions at play.

(I heard Gandalf’s lines in Sir Ian’s voice so that was fun :P)

I have an unbelievably funny idea for a prank but it would require a $100 or more investment in miniature REI tents so it’s never going to happen.

glumshoe Follow

ok fuck it

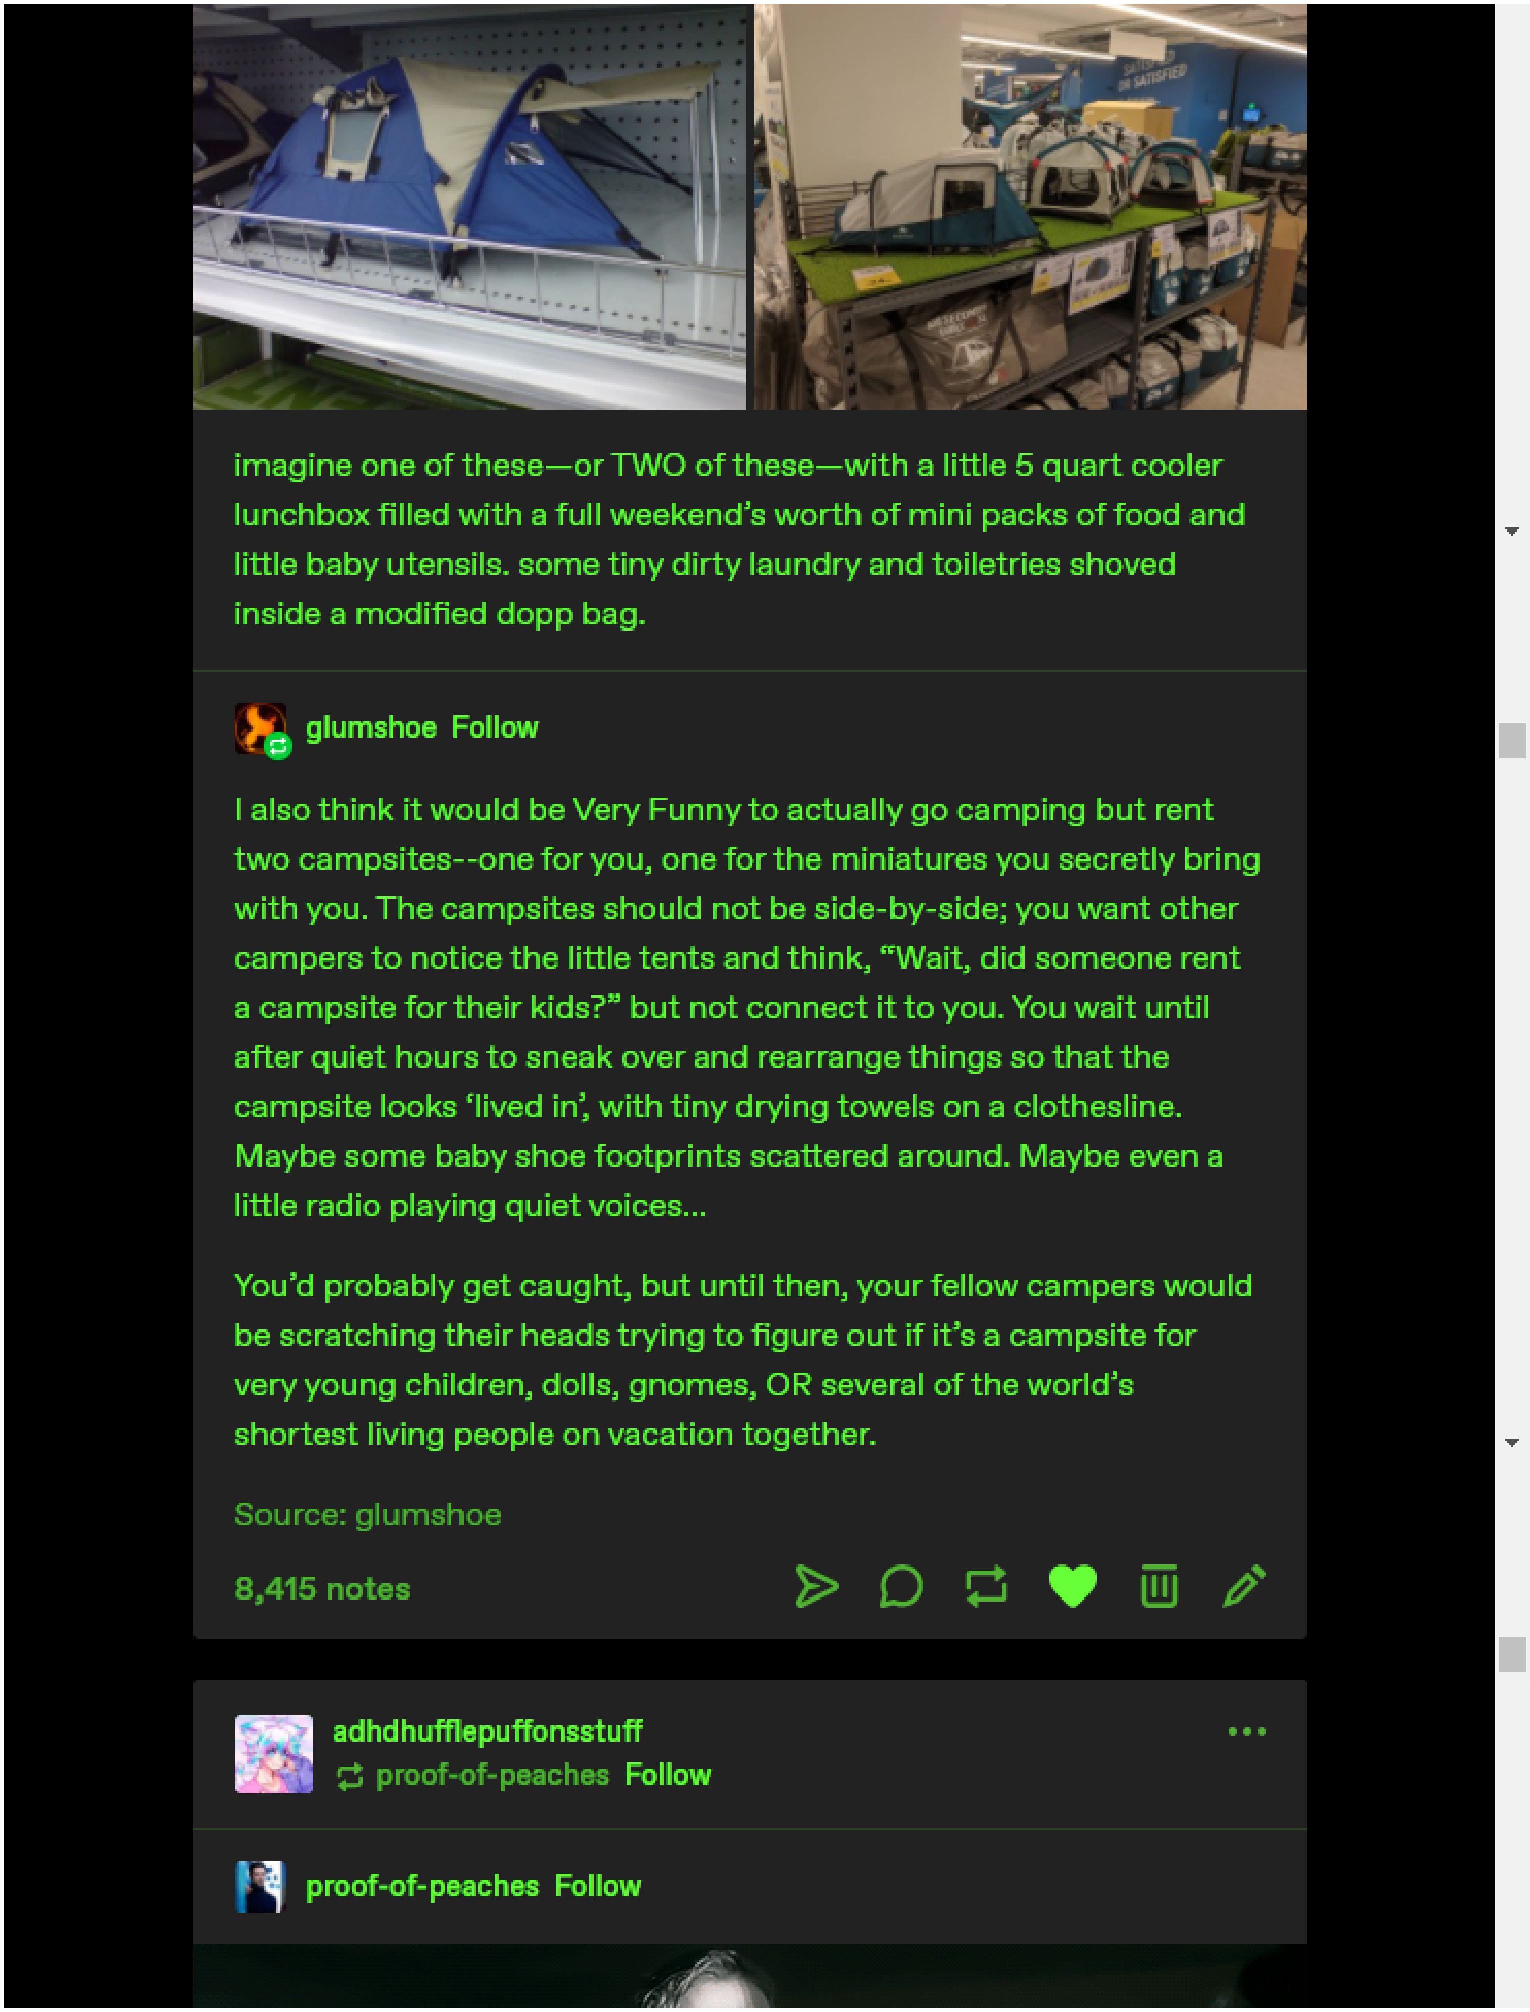
I want one of those scaled-down display tents they have at REI that’s just a tiny version of the full-size tents—something completely functional, but too small for a human. Not obviously dollhouse-sized, but large baby-sized; only the very smallest record-breaking outliers of adults could fit comfortably inside.

I then want to get a miniature sleeping bag at the same scale, some very small clothes, and some fun-sized groceries. I want to erect the tent in my park that’s closed to the public and arrange everything so that it looks like someone has been camping there—clothes strewn around or drying on a line, trash in a little bag, maybe the remains of a miniature campfire.

Then I want a conspirator to call in as a park visitor while my coworkers are working and report an illegal recreational campsite. I’d need my boss in on it to make sure no one tried to call the cops, but I’d want to ensure that my coworkers would go out and see what appears to be a perfect real campsite apparently being used by a single 20 inch tall adult.

I’m not actually going to do this, but I really want to see how people would react.

glumshoe Follow



imagine one of these—or TWO of these—with a little 5 quart cooler lunchbox filled with a full weekend's worth of mini packs of food and little baby utensils. some tiny dirty laundry and toiletries shoved inside a modified dopp bag.

glumshoe Follow

I also think it would be Very Funny to actually go camping but rent two campsites--one for you, one for the miniatures you secretly bring with you. The campsites should not be side-by-side; you want other campers to notice the little tents and think, "Wait, did someone rent a campsite for their kids?" but not connect it to you. You wait until after quiet hours to sneak over and rearrange things so that the campsite looks 'lived in', with tiny drying towels on a clothesline. Maybe some baby shoe footprints scattered around. Maybe even a little radio playing quiet voices...

You'd probably get caught, but until then, your fellow campers would be scratching their heads trying to figure out if it's a campsite for very young children, dolls, gnomes, OR several of the world's shortest living people on vacation together.

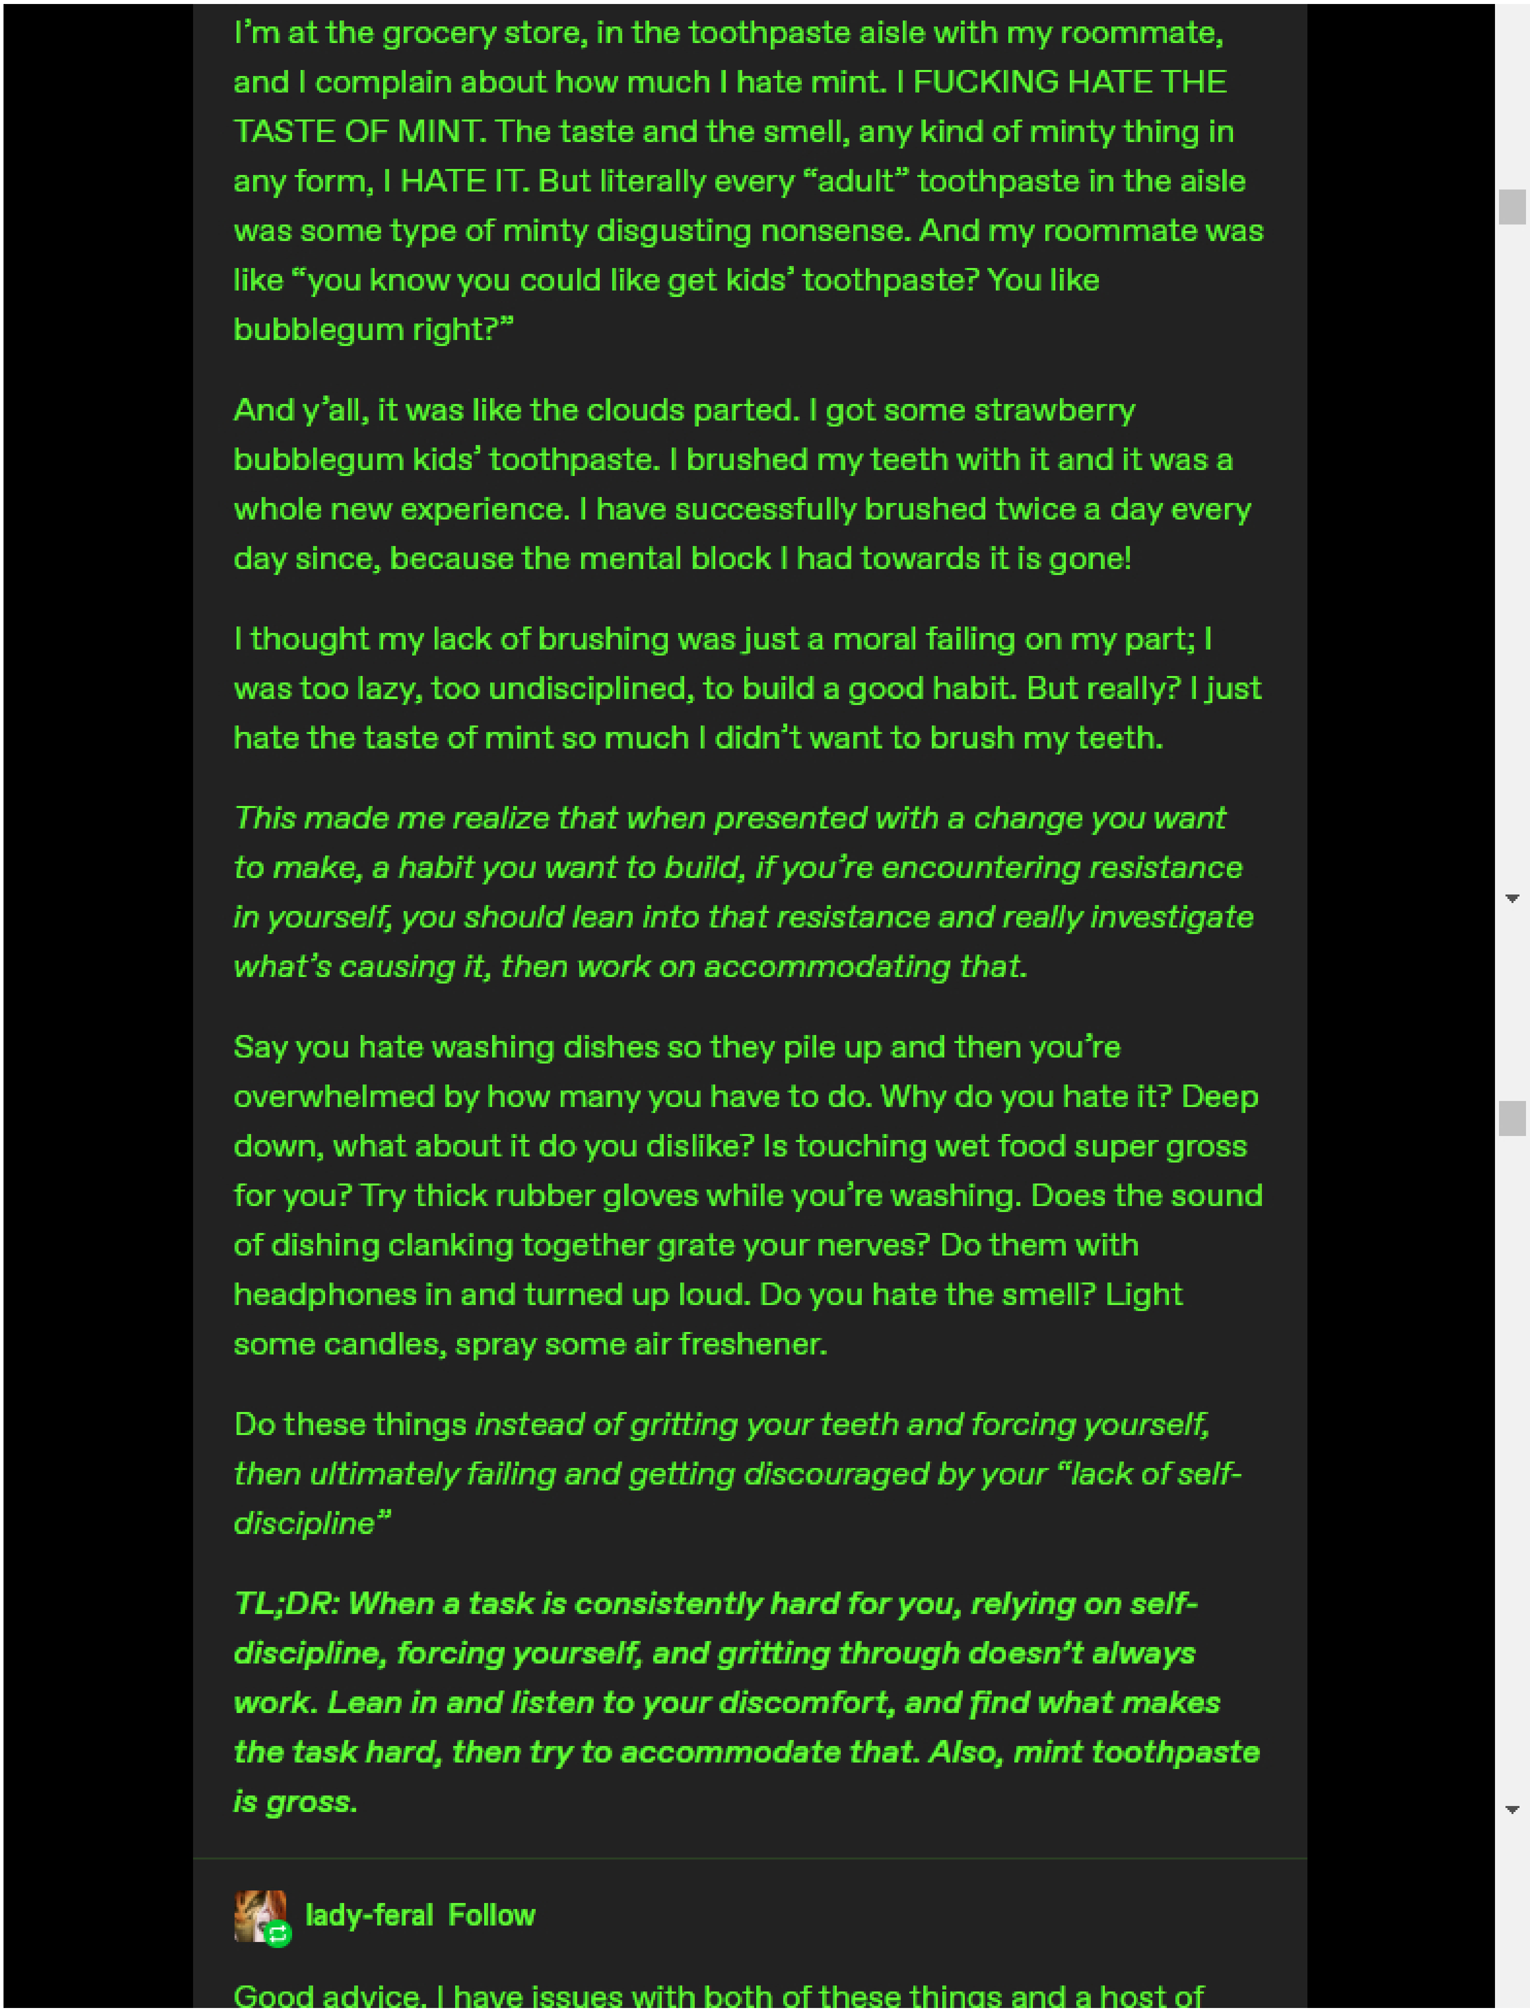
Self-Discipline Isn’t Always the Answer

So I wasn’t really taught to brush my teeth every day as a kid. So I didn’t. I got to be an adult and realized “hmm teeth are expensive I need to start brushing them” and brushing my teeth twice a day has been on my actual to do list every single day of my college career. It’s a habit I needed to build.

Have I successfully done it? Absolutely not. I’m pretty good about doing it at least once a day, but some days it just doesn’t happen. It’s not that I forget usually, I just had some aversion I couldn’t figure out, until last week.



I'm at the grocery store, in the toothpaste aisle with my roommate, and I complain about how much I hate mint. I FUCKING HATE THE TASTE OF MINT. The taste and the smell, any kind of minty thing in any form, I HATE IT. But literally every "adult" toothpaste in the aisle was some type of minty disgusting nonsense. And my roommate was like "you know you could like get kids' toothpaste? You like bubblegum right?"

And y'all, it was like the clouds parted. I got some strawberry bubblegum kids' toothpaste. I brushed my teeth with it and it was a whole new experience. I have successfully brushed twice a day every day since, because the mental block I had towards it is gone!

I thought my lack of brushing was just a moral failing on my part; I was too lazy, too undisciplined, to build a good habit. But really? I just hate the taste of mint so much I didn't want to brush my teeth.

This made me realize that when presented with a change you want to make, a habit you want to build, if you're encountering resistance in yourself, you should lean into that resistance and really investigate what's causing it, then work on accommodating that.

Say you hate washing dishes so they pile up and then you're overwhelmed by how many you have to do. Why do you hate it? Deep down, what about it do you dislike? Is touching wet food super gross for you? Try thick rubber gloves while you're washing. Does the sound of dishing clanking together grate your nerves? Do them with headphones in and turned up loud. Do you hate the smell? Light some candles, spray some air freshener.

Do these things instead of gritting your teeth and forcing yourself, then ultimately failing and getting discouraged by your "lack of self-discipline"

TL;DR: When a task is consistently hard for you, relying on self-discipline, forcing yourself, and gritting through doesn't always work. Lean in and listen to your discomfort, and find what makes the task hard, then try to accommodate that. Also, mint toothpaste is gross.

lady-feral

Good advice. I have issues with both of these things and a host of others.

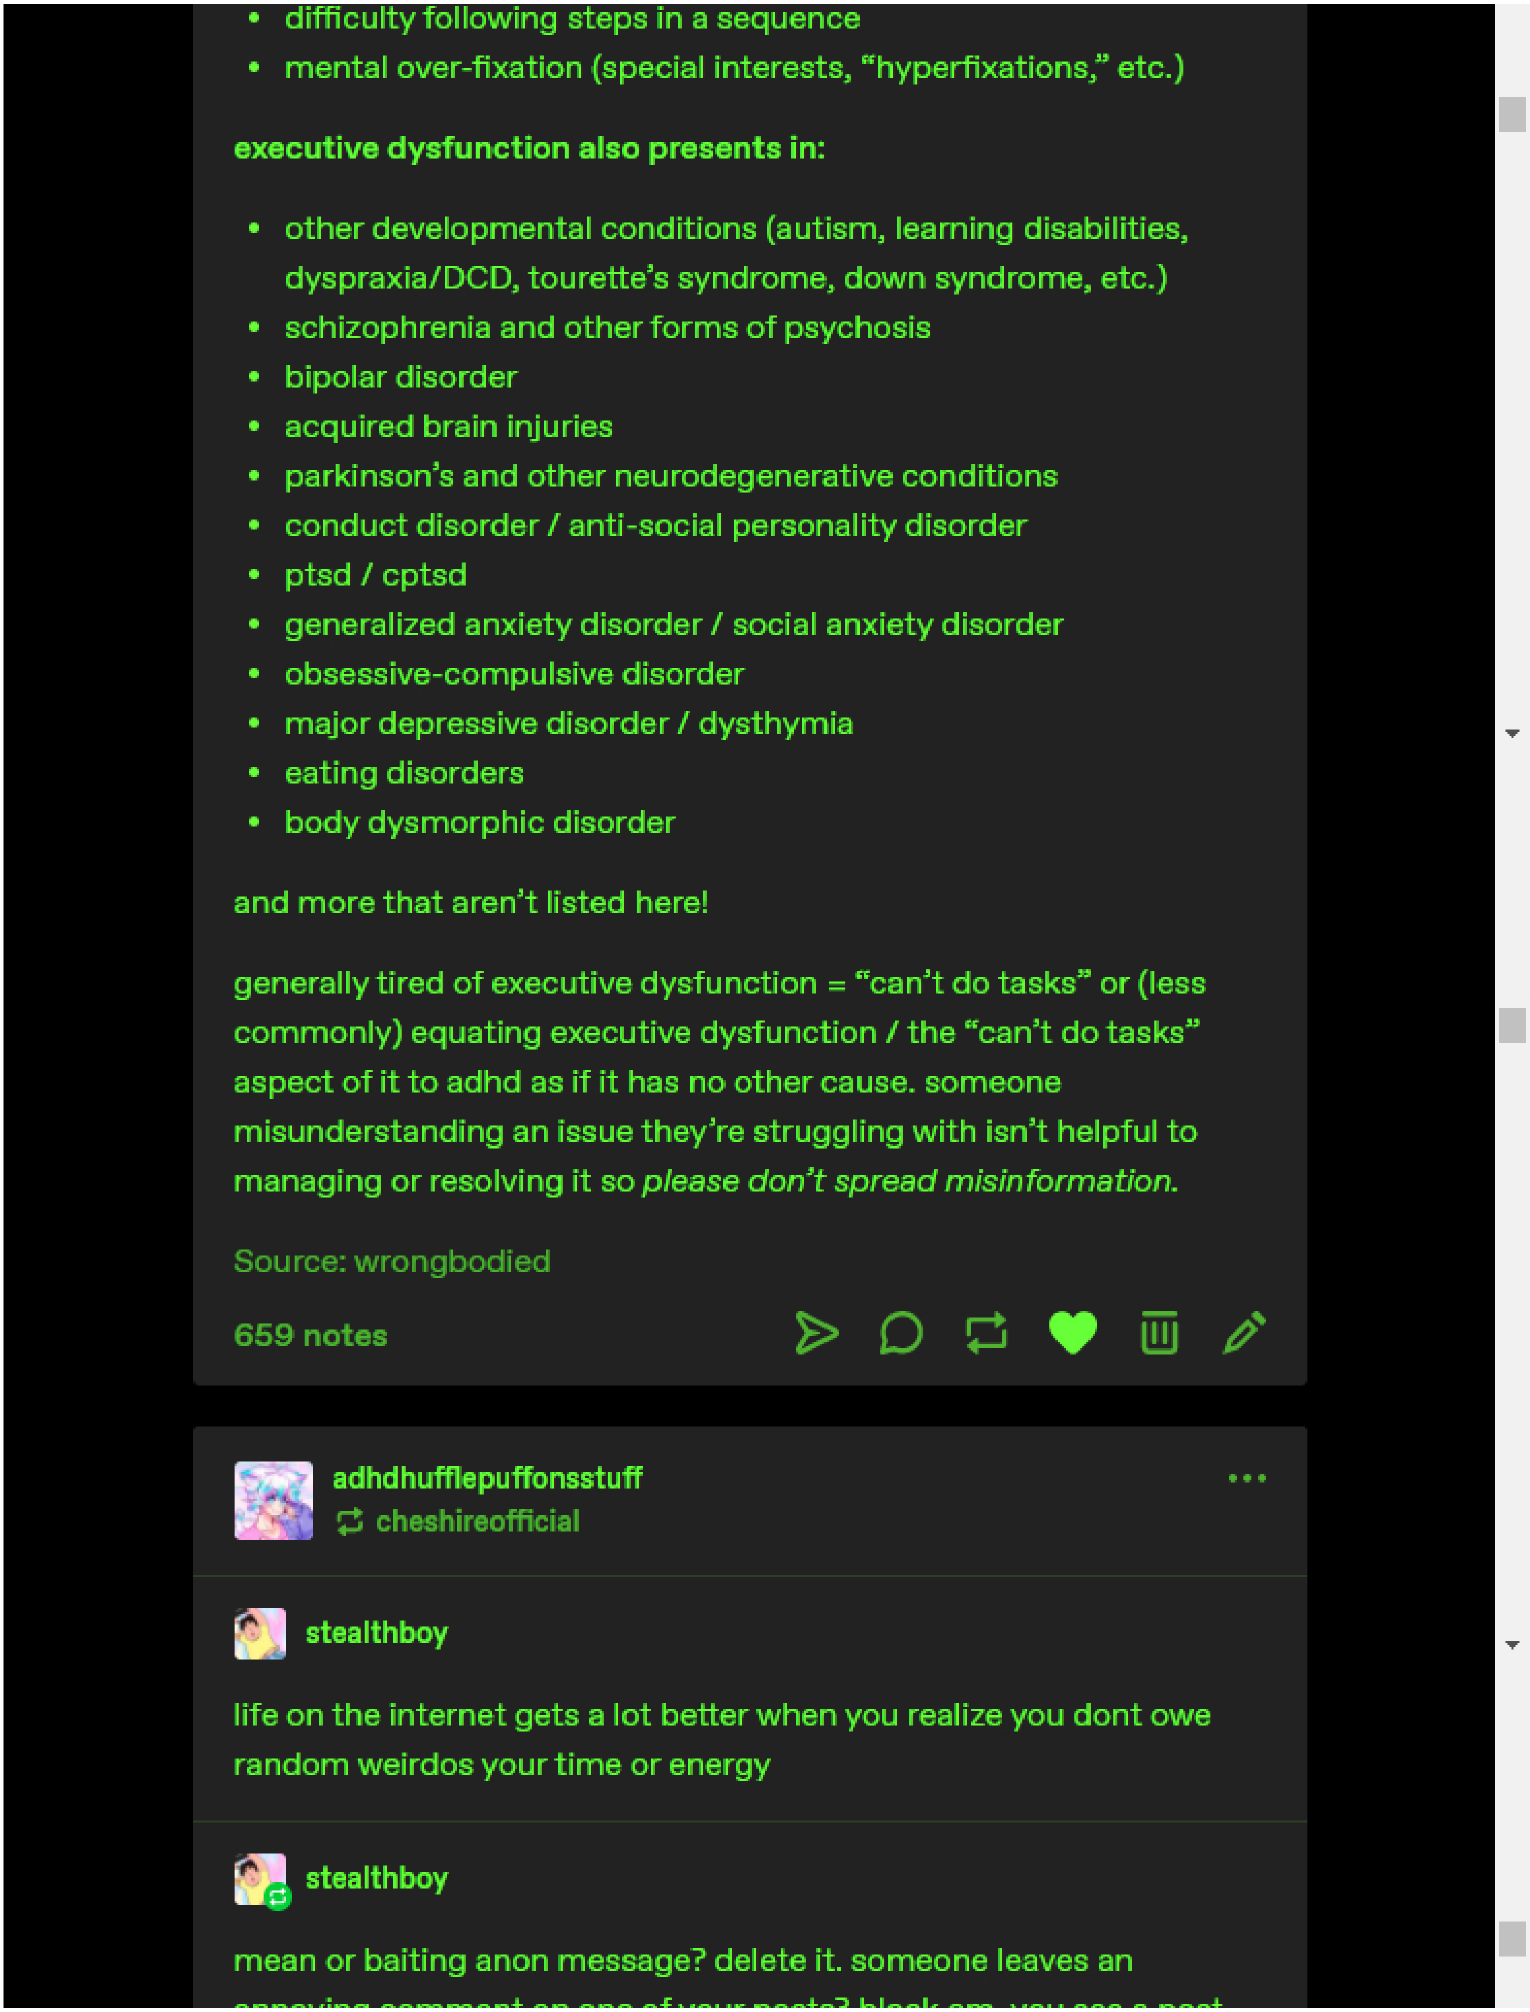
executive dysfunction is not limited to difficulty with time management, initiating tasks, or planning!!!!!! executive dysfunction also does not exclusively occur with adhd!!!

other parts of executive dysfunction include:

- emotional dysregulation
- poor impulse control
- difficulty with working memory, short-term memory loss (forgetting things that were recently or just said, heard, or done)
- easily losing or misplacing belongings
- difficulty learning from consequences
- engaging in socially inappropriate behavior without realizing it
- difficulty examining one’s own behavior
- difficulty adapting to new circumstances / panic about change in routine
- persistently underestimating or overestimating tasks, difficulty with prioritizing tasks
- difficulty understanding different points of view



- difficulty following steps in a sequence
- mental over-fixation (special interests, "hyperfixations," etc.)

executive dysfunction also presents in:

- other developmental conditions (autism, learning disabilities, dyspraxia/DCD, tourette's syndrome, down syndrome, etc.)
- schizophrenia and other forms of psychosis
- bipolar disorder
- acquired brain injuries
- parkinson's and other neurodegenerative conditions
- conduct disorder / anti-social personality disorder
- ptsd / cptsd
- generalized anxiety disorder / social anxiety disorder
- obsessive-compulsive disorder
- major depressive disorder / dysthymia
- eating disorders
- body dysmorphic disorder and more that aren't listed here!

generally tired of executive dysfunction = "can't do tasks" or (less commonly) equating executive dysfunction / the "can't do tasks" aspect of it to adhd as if it has no other cause. someone misunderstanding an issue they're struggling with isn't helpful to managing or resolving it so please don't spread misinformation.

If we all keep pretending that ideological purity is possible and erasing the journeys we've gone though to learn from mistakes and become better, more educated people I feel like that does more harm than good.

Anyway, your attitude is victim blaming. We should not normalize a culture of fear where everyone is desperate to hide their flaws because someone might start a harassment campaign against them. The solution is ending that culture, not saddling people with the

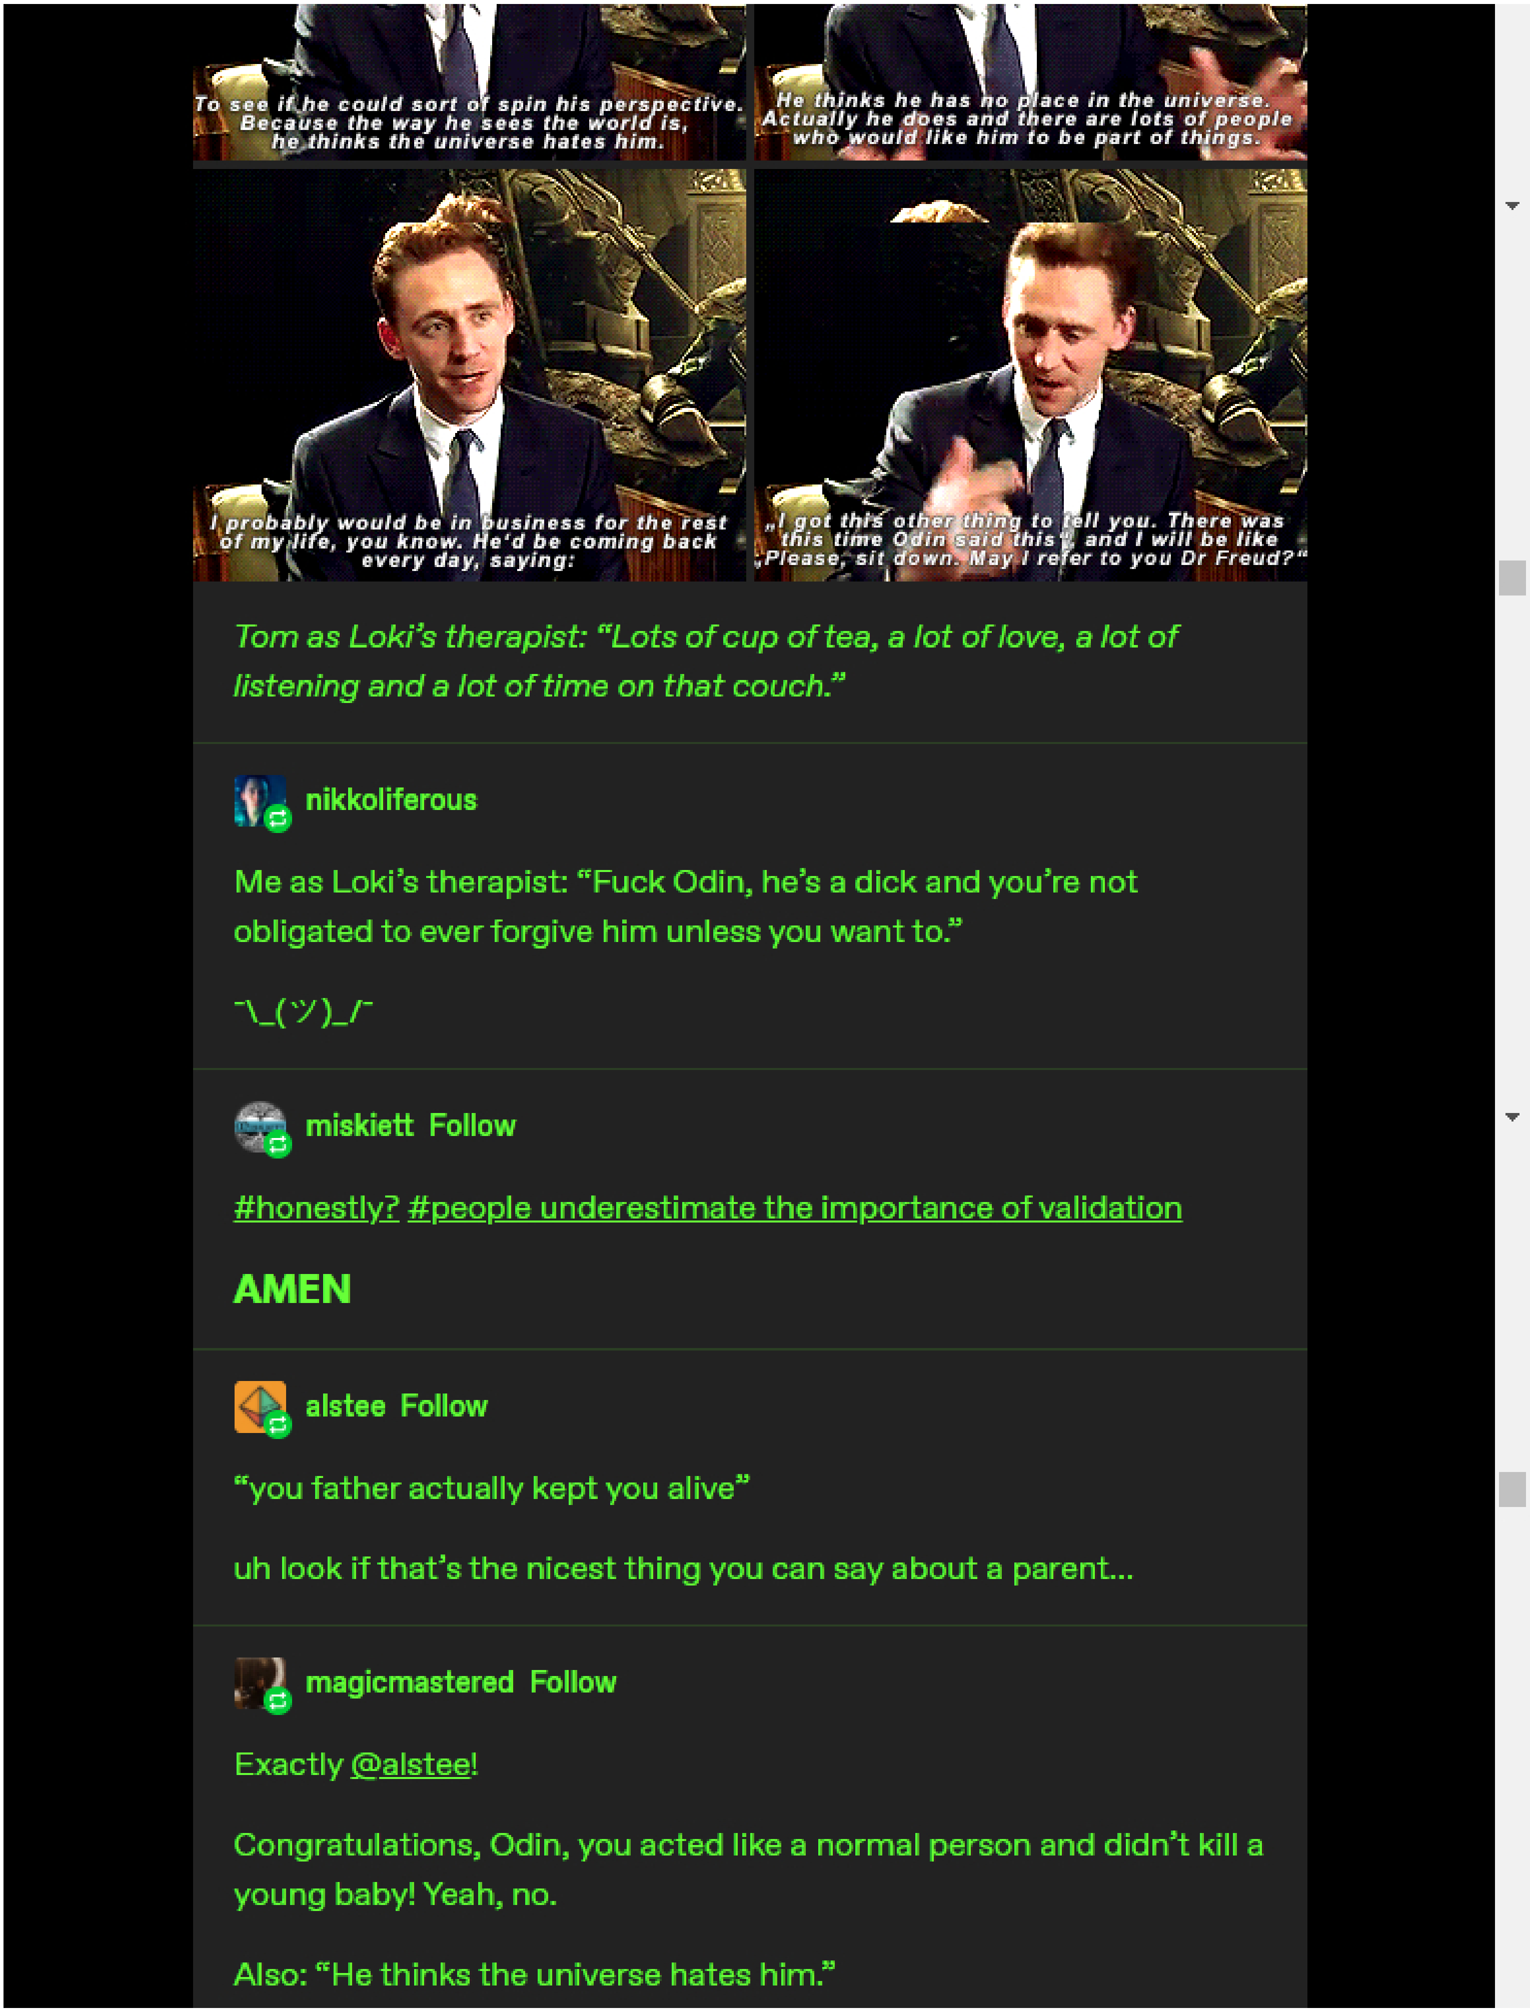
If I were Loki's therapist I would say „First of all we need to put a down payment on at least 30 sessions. It's going to take a while.“

I would do a lot of listening and I would say: „How does that make you feel?“

I would try to encourage him to forgive his family as well I would be leading him towards forgiveness and say:

„Your brother is not so bad. Your father actually kept you alive. Your mother cares about you very much.“



To see if he could sort of spin his perspective. Because the way he sees the world is, he thinks the universe hates him.

He thinks he has no place in the universe. Actually he does and there are lots of people who would like him to be part of things.

I probably would be in business for the rest of my life, you know. He'd be coming back every day, saying:

„I got this other thing to tell you. There was this time Odin said this", and I will be like „Please, sit down. May I refer to you Dr Freud?"

Exactly @alstee!

Congratulations, Odin, you acted like a normal person and didn't kill a young baby! Yeah, no.

Also: "He thinks the universe hates him."

Well, Loki's not exactly wrong there. The universe he lives in honestly does seem to hate him. Seriously, even fate seems to want to kill him:

His "father" doesn't give a crap about him; he was raised in a culture that hates his birth race (in large part because of said "father"); that "father" lied to him for his entire life; his brother takes everything that comes out of that "father's" mouth as utter truth; his mother cares more about keeping the peace than his well-being; he has no friends; his brother's friends dislike and distrust him; the people he's known from childhood turn on him as soon as his brother's not there; when he eventually tries to kill himself by dropping himself into an unstable wormhole he not only defies all logic by surviving, he lands on the doorstep of an omnicidal sadist who tortures, threatens, and mind-warps him into attacking another planet; his family assumes the worst of him and doesn't even ask what happened; his "father" sentences him to a lifetime (literal millennia) of solitary confinement even though others (including his "father" and brother) have done the same if not worse and face nowhere near as harsh consequences; the only person who cares enough to visit him dies within eighteen months.....

Loki has absurdly bad luck. No wonder he thinks the universe hates him.

Then: "He thinks he has no place in the universe. Actually he does...." Where? It's not Jotunheim, at least not at this point. Loki's been raised to hate and fear Jotuns and hasn't worked through that yet. It's certainly not Earth. Not Asgard either; he flies in the face of Asgard's idea of what he should be. So where? Maybe somewhere we haven't visited yet, but that's the only option now.

And then: "there are lots of people who would like him to be a part of things." Like who? Not Odin; Thor was content to let Loki rot in prison until he had a use for him; not Thor's friends, who committed treason against him. Maaaaybe Frigga, but even she clearly thought he should stay in prison and never questioned Odin's sentence.

TL;DR: I like Tom, but he doesn't really know what he's talking about here and idealizes Loki's family too much.

(Ten centuries of living under a narcissistic king who is your father.

And you can't/won't leave the realm because:

a) places where you could blend in and hide, you'll outlive everyone;

b) places where people live longer, everyone knows you are Asgardian royalty and it will be harder to come up with a fake identity and disguised appearance that will hold up over centuries, unless you were constantly on the move?

c) you would have to go entirely no contact with your family, which you haven't stopped loving; and most importantly

d) at this point of time (Pre-Thor) you just haven't given up hope, like many children of narcissistic-personality-disorder-having parents – who are unaware that said parent does not think like a healthy person –, that, if only you find the right combination of words, if only you do the sufficiently impressive thing, if only you try a little bit harder, you will make them see your worth, and they will love you as much as they do their favorite child. You are so close.)

((Remember that Loki didn't give up trying to please Odin up until "Loki, no" at the Bifrost. That was how deep the conditioning went.

And I forget who pointed it out before here in tumblr (sorry!), but going by Loki's face in Ragnarok when Odin says he loves his sons, it seems that, had Odin apologized or even given any indication of forgiving Loki and wanting to start over, Loki might very well have fallen back in to the fold. He just wanted validation, is the ridiculously tragic thing, and no one gave it to him, ever.))

If you think about it, it says volumes about Loki's inherent goodness that he didn't turn out worse and didn't do more damage when he had the opportunity (because he had plenty of opportunity).

@magicmastered @radioactivephysicist Yeah, agreed. Tom has an excellent grasp of Loki's inner psyche (because, well, MCU Loki was partly his creation, it wouldn't be the same character had another actor had handled him), but in all seriousness, I can't be mad at him for stumbling when it comes to Loki's family.

This whole "some parents have NPD, and it messes up the whole family in these various particular ways" is not exactly very widespread knowledge.

I can't even remember how I first stumbled upon it. (I want to say it was via a forum where people talked about irl problems, and some people were pointed to websites with info and resources geared to adult children of NPD parents?)

If anyone is interested, I've been skimming through the book The Narcissistic Family: Diagnosis and Treatment by Stephanie Donaldson-Pressman, and it's super interesting! It's aimed at therapists, but it's easy, if sad, to read as a general audience person.

I've heard internet anecdotes of people who had to try several therapists before they found one that could actually help them, because the first ones ended up validating/siding with the NPD parent's perspective (big WHOOPS, continuing that gaslighting) and/or didn't really get what kind of damage and toxic family dynamics they were actually dealing with.

Now, reading through the book, there are example cases where the patient starts seeking therapy for specific problems, not having the slightest idea that their parents did anything wrong or unusual in their parenting, until a neutral third party correctly identifies the cognitive dysfunction in what the patient is saying, and digs deeper to trace the path of that dysfunctional thinking right to the source.

Also, tell me these two following bits don't scream MCU Loki:

(This first one explains Loki's whole behavior in Thor 1 and Thor 2, to a T.)

In a narcissistic family the responsibility for the meeting of emotional needs becomes skewed-instead of resting with the parents, the responsibility shifts to the child. The child becomes inappropri ately responsible for meeting parental needs and in so doing is deprived of opportunities for necessary experimentation and growth.

ReactivelReflective

As Echo could only reflect the words of others, so children raised in narcissistic families become reactive and reflective individuals. Because they learn early on that their primary job is to meet parental needs-whatever those may be-they do not develop trust in their own feelings and judgments. As a matter of fact, their own feelings are a source of discomfort: it is better not to have feelings at all than to have feelings that cannot be expressed or validated.

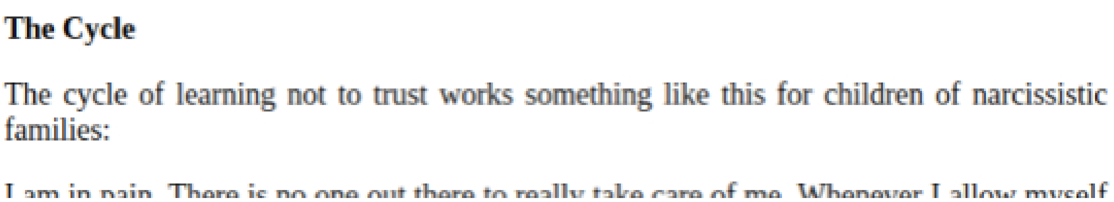
Thus, rather than act on her own feelings in a proactive way, the child waits to see what others expect or need and then reacts to those expectations. The reaction can be either positive or negative-the child can elect either to meet the expressed or implied needs or to rebel against the needs-but either course of action is reactive.

In the same way, the child becomes a reflection of parental expectations. This happens in all families to some extent, of course; the concept of mirroring in personality/ego development is a long-established tenet of psychology.' Frequently in the narcissistic family, however, the mirror may reflect the child's inability to meet parental needs. This reflection almost always is interpreted by the child as inadequacy and failure on her part.

Problems with Intimacy

For the child of a Narcissistic family, intimate relationships are a problem. Children of these families have learned not to trust. Therefore in adulthood, as much as they may want to form close and loving relationships, they have difficulty letting down the barriers to trust they have erected.

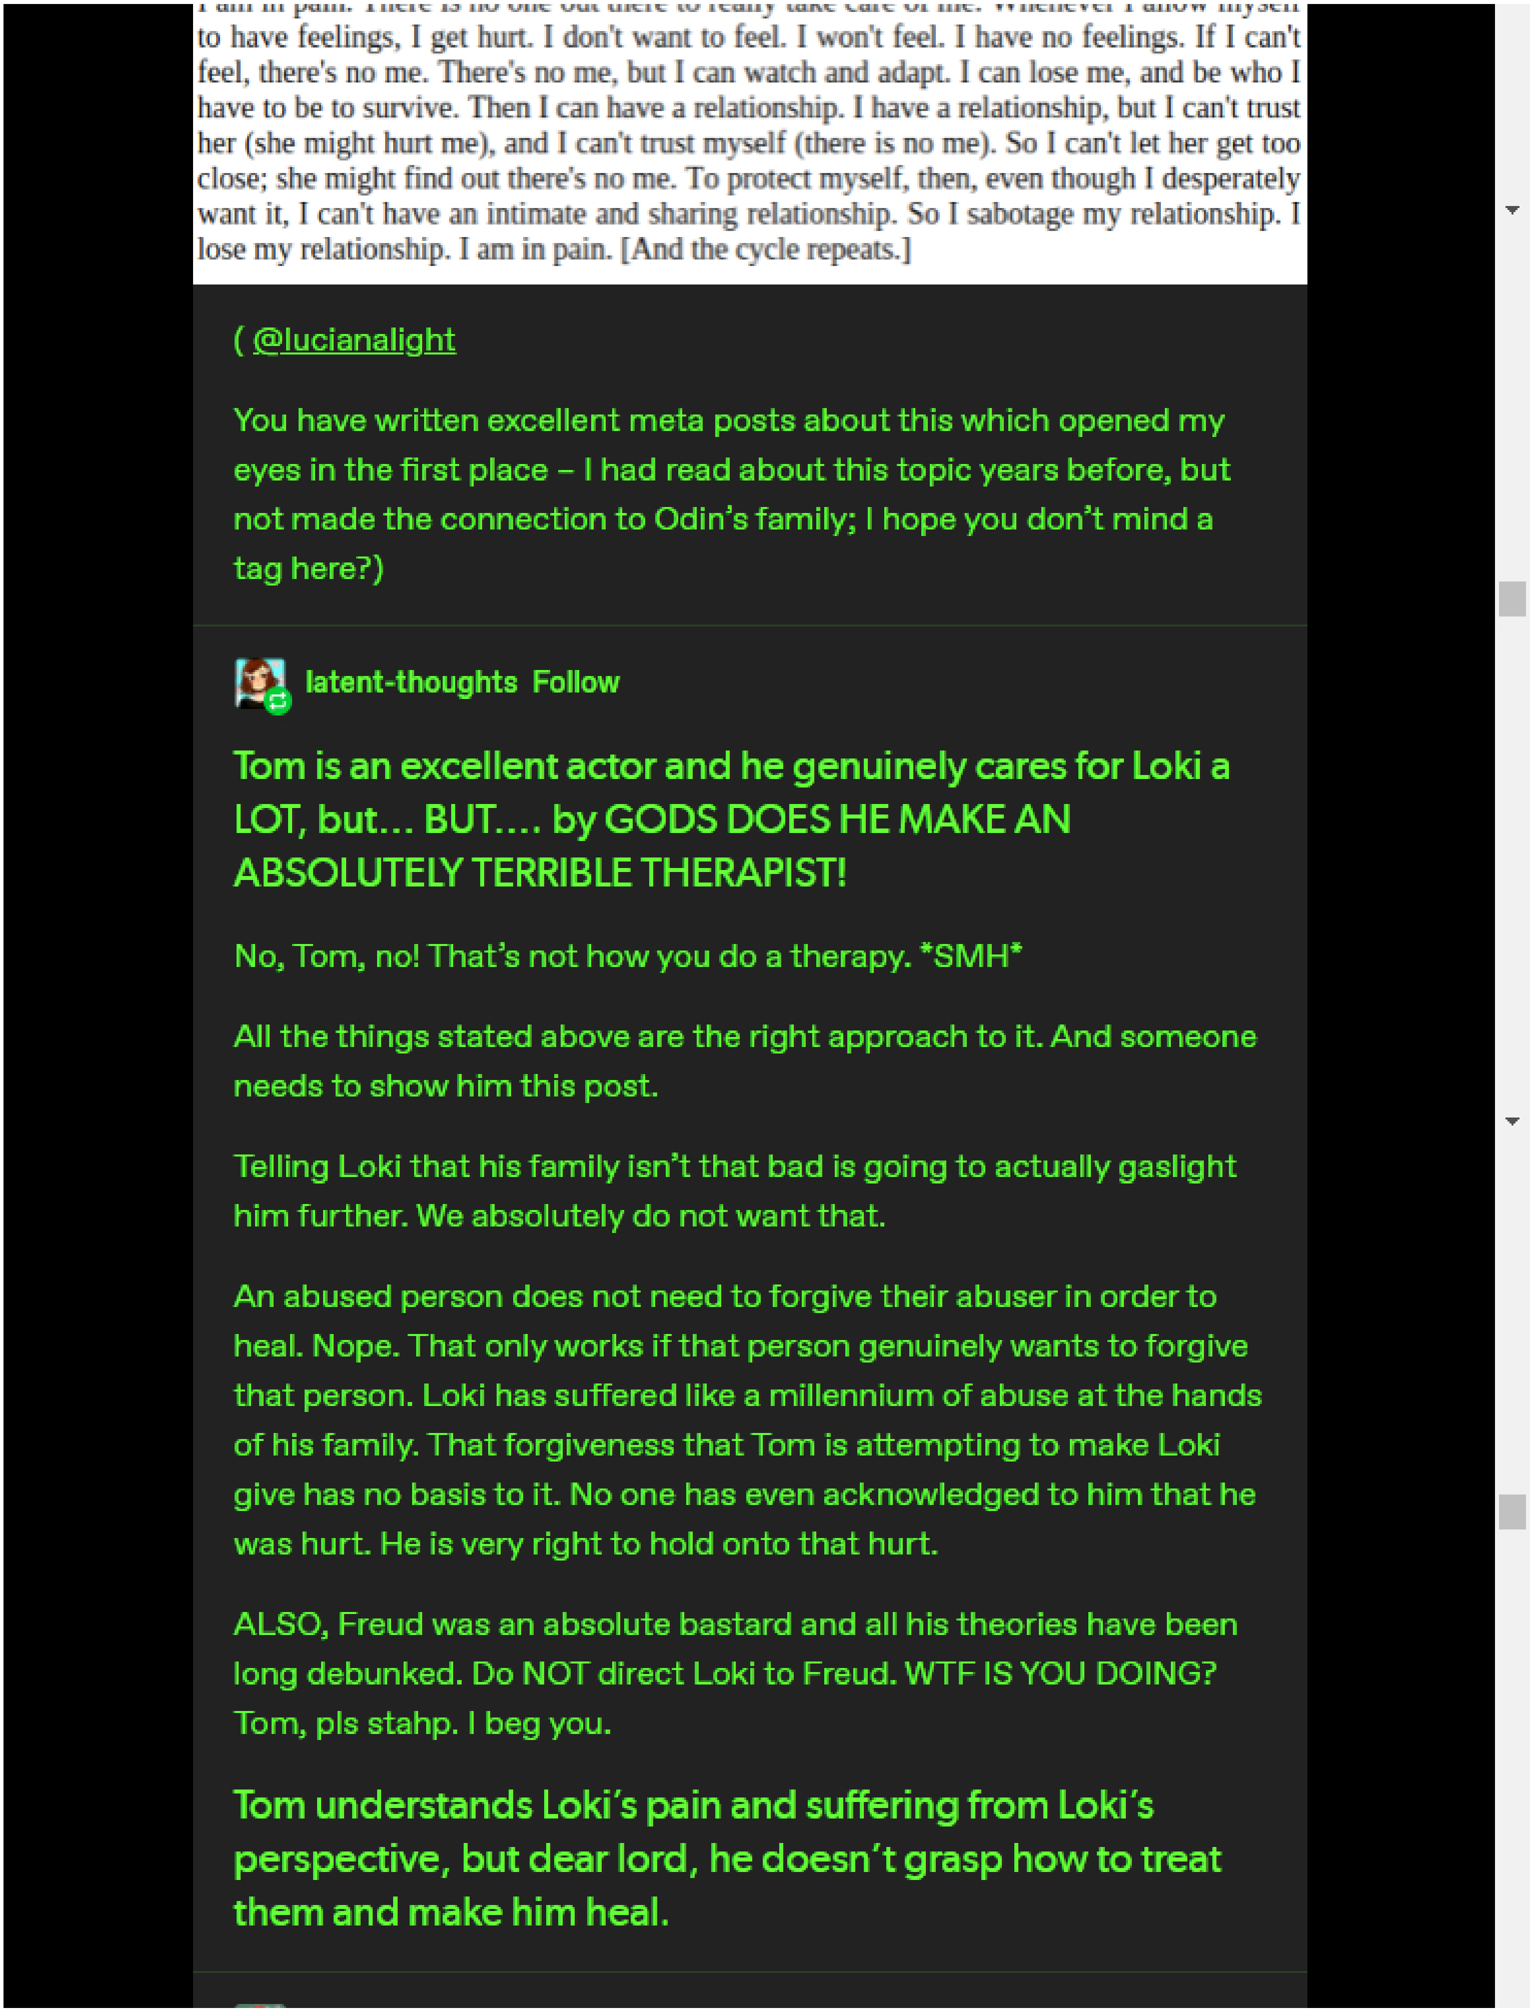
(And this one is in a section about romantic relationships, but I can see this whole thing running through Loki's subconscious in every scene where he has Thor or Frigga standing in front of him.)



The Cycle

The cycle of learning not to trust works something like this for children of narcissistic families:

I am in pain. There is no one out there to really take care of me. Whenever I allow myself



I am in pain. There is no one out there to really take care of me. Whenever I allow myself to have feelings, I get hurt. I don't want to feel. I won't feel. I have no feelings. If I can't feel, there's no me. There's no me, but I can watch and adapt. I can lose me, and be who I have to be to survive. Then I can have a relationship. I have a relationship, but I can't trust her (she might hurt me), and I can't trust myself (there is no me). So I can't let her get too close; she might find out there's no me. To protect myself, then, even though I desperately want it, I can't have an intimate and sharing relationship. So I sabotage my relationship. I lose my relationship. I am in pain. [And the cycle repeats.]

(@lucianalight

You have written excellent meta posts about this which opened my eyes in the first place – I had read about this topic years before, but not made the connection to Odin's family; I hope you don't mind a tag here?)

Tom is an excellent actor and he genuinely cares for Loki a LOT, but… BUT…. by GODS DOES HE MAKE AN ABSOLUTELY TERRIBLE THERAPIST!

No, Tom, no! That's not how you do a therapy. SMH

All the things stated above are the right approach to it. And someone needs to show him this post.

Telling Loki that his family isn't that bad is going to actually gaslight him further. We absolutely do not want that.

An abused person does not need to forgive their abuser in order to heal. Nope. That only works if that person genuinely wants to forgive that person. Loki has suffered like a millennium of abuse at the hands of his family. That forgiveness that Tom is attempting to make Loki give has no basis to it. No one has even acknowledged to him that he was hurt. He is very right to hold onto that hurt.

ALSO, Freud was an absolute bastard and all his theories have been long debunked. Do NOT direct Loki to Freud. WTF IS YOU DOING? Tom, pls stahp. I beg you.

Tom understands Loki's pain and suffering from Loki's perspective, but dear lord, he doesn't grasp how to treat them and make him heal.

redfoxwritesstuff Follow

I do want to point out that while I do agree with a lot of what's said above, Disney is known for being very strict in their contracts regarding what the actors can and cannot say, how they promote the films and such. This could very well extend to how he is required to frame Loki's relationship with Odin to keep the topic off the blatantly mentally and emotionally abusive nature

Also- Tom very clearly only has a surface knowledge of mental healthcare but he is a actor, not person working in the field so I wouldn't expect more.

darthxerik Follow

I'm interested to see if Tom's opinions on Loki in therapy may have changed in the past handful of years. It has been like 7 years since this interview, and he is a very different Tom than the one I remember obsessing over beginning in 2012.

This is only speculation, but Tom seems more guarded, more careful, more somber, and like he has been touched by certain griefs and disillusioning seasons these past few years. Since about the time they were filming Ragnarok...he seems changed. And his most recent project Betrayal, and the things he's said about what it is LIKE being betrayed...seems like he's pulling from personal experience (as all actors may do). Again, no clue what may have gone on behind-the-scenes in that man's life or if he's ever encountered narcissistic abuse or trauma in his life. But I would hope that whatever pain he's been mulling over these past few years, he went to see a therapist. I pray and hope he did, because it's just really helpful, no matter what the severity of the trauma was. It's just helpful to talk it out.

Am I hopeful that maybe Tom has a new perspective on therapy so that he can bring these first-hand experiences at therapy...to the creative meetings re: the LOKI SERIES? What, no! That's...silly. ~~Is it?!~~

What I'm saying is, this was younger and brighter and more optimistic Tom. It's strange, but I also used to see Loki, and the Odin family, through that lens. I used to think that all that Loki needed was a big bear-hug from Thor... a soup and a salad and a cuddle and a lullaby from Frigga... a big apology from Odin and perhaps a sacrifice from Odin to prove he means it... and maybe a friend. Maybe a from Odin to prove he means it... and maybe a friend. Maybe a revelation on Loki's part that he was "worthy all along." And then Loki would be good, literally from one day to the next.

But that's not how self-acceptance works after a MILENNIA of emotional abuse and neglect. Heck, even after 25 years, for me, it is taking years to unpack this crap. And I have been to several therapists.

I guess I'm just curious to see what new-Tom brings to the table. I wonder if Tom sees Loki differently, and if he's perhaps finally ready to conclude Loki's journey in a way that makes Loki less codependent with Thor and Odin, and even Frigga, and allows Loki to be his own separate being. Because it would seem that Loki's only able to survive and surpass the darkness of his past and of Thanos' clutches in a universe where he has to GO IT ALONE. And so what's the positive take-away in this story?

It's gotta be something Loki was meant to do all along. Break away. Cut loose. Find himself and find the joy in life, apart from his loved ones, who were also always a source of pain. And perhaps he won't have to die this time. Perhaps he can end the cycle. ~~And if the Loki Series doesn't allow for this kind of a positive message to flow out of it, because I don't trust Marvel anymore... then what even is the point??~~

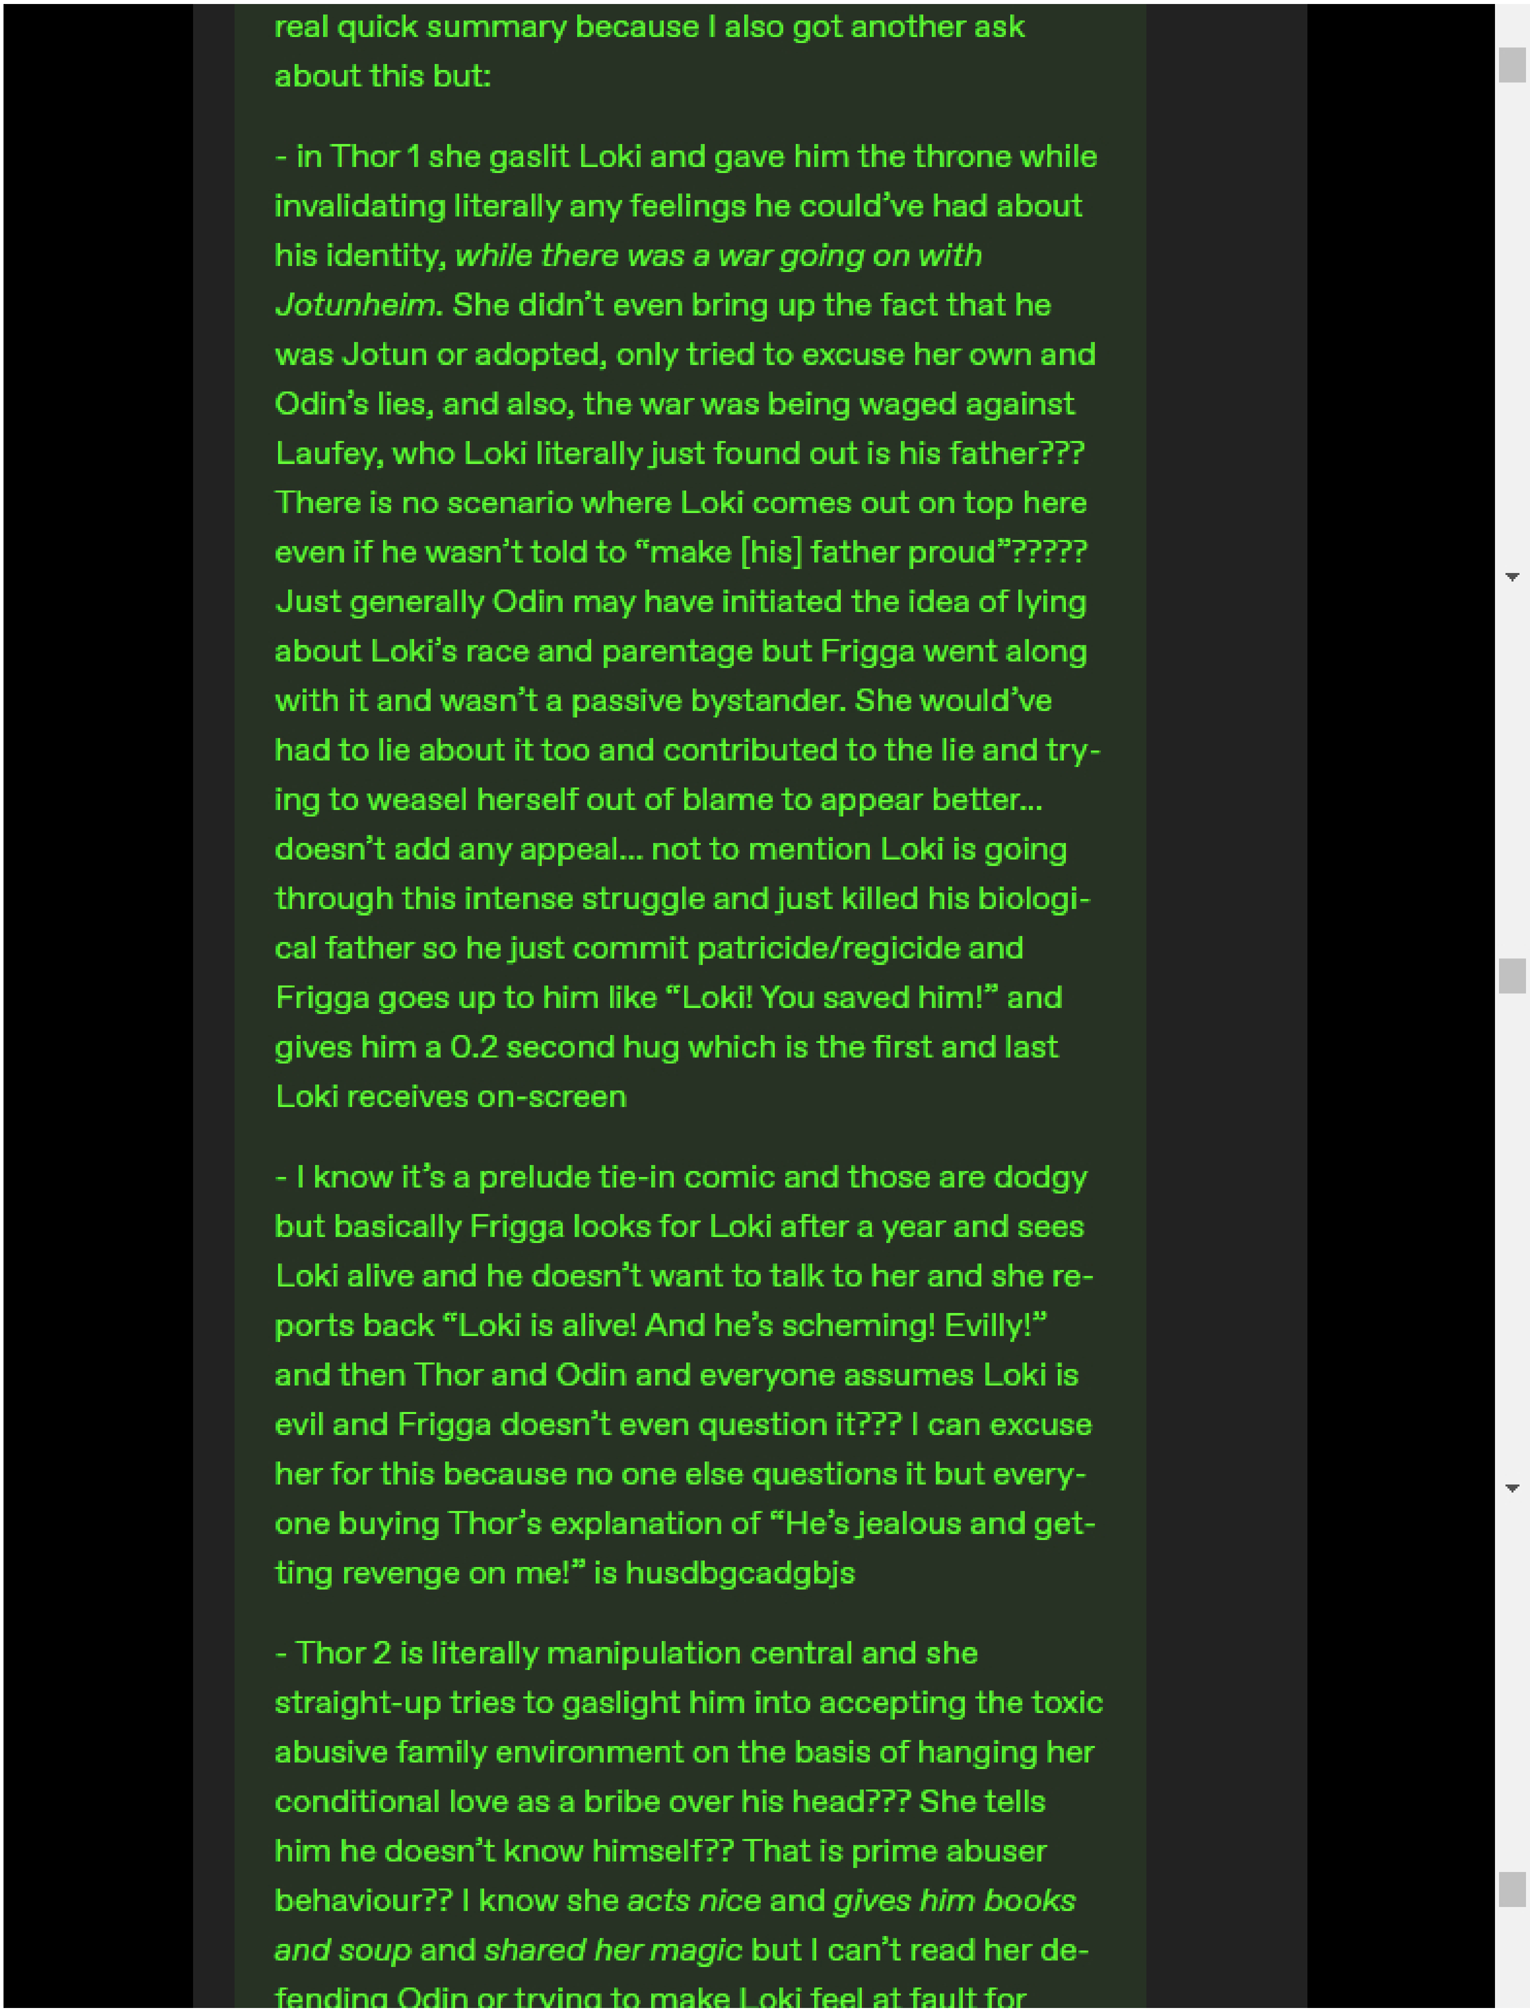
Anonymous asked:

Wait, why do we hate Frigga again?

worstloki answered:



real quick summary because I also got another ask about this but:

- in Thor 1 she gaslit Loki and gave him the throne while invalidating literally any feelings he could've had about his identity, while there was a war going on with Jotunheim. She didn't even bring up the fact that he was Jotun or adopted, only tried to excuse her own and Odin's lies, and also, the war was being waged against Laufey, who Loki literally just found out is his father??? There is no scenario where Loki comes out on top here even if he wasn't told to "make [his] father proud"????? Just generally Odin may have initiated the idea of lying about Loki's race and parentage but Frigga went along with it and wasn't a passive bystander. She would've had to lie about it too and contributed to the lie and trying to weasel herself out of blame to appear better… doesn't add any appeal… not to mention Loki is going through this intense struggle and just killed his biological father so he just commit patricide/regicide and Frigga goes up to him like "Loki! You saved him!" and gives him a 0.2 second hug which is the first and last Loki receives on-screen

- I know it's a prelude tie-in comic and those are dodgy but basically Frigga looks for Loki after a year and sees Loki alive and he doesn't want to talk to her and she reports back "Loki is alive! And he's scheming! Evilly!" and then Thor and Odin and everyone assumes Loki is evil and Frigga doesn't even question it??? I can excuse her for this because no one else questions it but everyone buying Thor's explanation of "He's jealous and getting revenge on me!" is husdbgcadgbjs

- Thor 2 is literally manipulation central and she straight-up tries to gaslight him into accepting the toxic abusive family environment on the basis of hanging her conditional love as a bribe over his head??? She tells him he doesn't know himself?? That is prime abuser behaviour?? I know she acts nice and gives him books and soup and shared her magic but I can't read her defending Odin or trying to make Loki feel at fault for things she hasn't tried to get his story about as anything other than psychological/emotional abuse.

queencfthestarsdrfoster Follow

.....I'm glad I'm not the only one who picked up on that. Frigga seems to be the collective fan favorite. The truth is she honestly never really helped Loki acknowledge himself and continues trying to push him as you said in this toxic abusive family dynamic that he desperately wants out of. However, because she's the only one he believes in his mind is there for him, he's consistently doing things and actions with her in mind despite the emotional manipulation.

So here's what we know:

- It was a Noldo who gave him that name
- A Noldo who knew he was once Mairon, since Sauron is somewhat of a thing off that (Beloved-one –> Hated-one, basically)

- Had to be a Noldo that actually knew him and thus knew he earned the name. He wasn't in Valinor with the elves, so they wouldn't have met him until middle earth.
- Why Thauron first? What part of Quenyan uses the Th instead of the S? Feanorians. Only Feanorians.

Obviously it was Maedhros who gave him the name and I think that's hilarious.

“Hey man who did you meet in Angband?”

“<internally> Well I met that guy Mairon I heard Aule cursing about. But I can't call that bag of [redacted] “precious.” [redacted] it I'm just going to call him…. [redacted] Awful man. Abhorred man. I met just the worst guy. That's his name. Terrible guy. Just. Overall garbage of a guy. That's his name.

What started as a little project to work on through rqgg2020 turned into a six week long project. (oops) The painting took 4 days, the embroidery and beading another week on and off.

Honestly the moment Alex said she had a giant feather cape I knew I was going to have to try and bring her to life. It's been a fun, if very frustrating project. It's weird making a cosplay with zero visual references!

We went from "I'm just your problem" to "Loving you is a good problem to have"

This is great, because what is Bubbline all about? Growth. Healing.

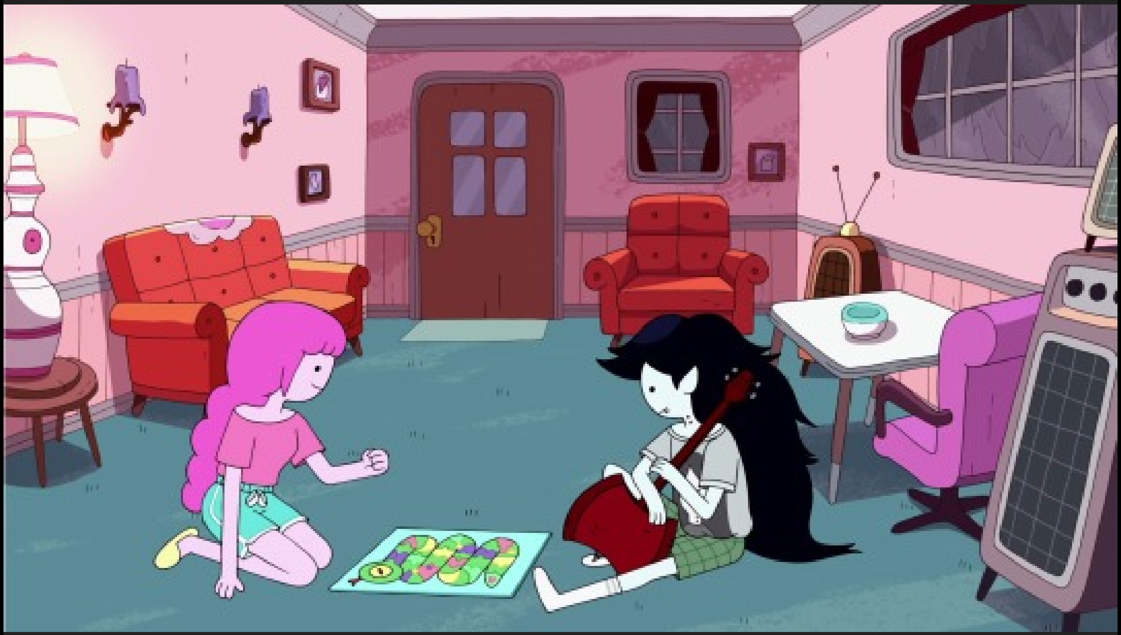
Marcy said so herself, they started off as "messed up kids". They met at the wrong time and obviously had a lot of issues to take care of. It was a time when they had to reflect on themselves and put theirselves first.

But they managed to work past that, little by little. It was such a long process, and it wasn't linear. And that's exactly what's so great about it! It's fine to have a few bumps on the road. It's okay to not be happy together 100% of the time. There's no such thing as a perfect relationship anyway, and I find that message important.

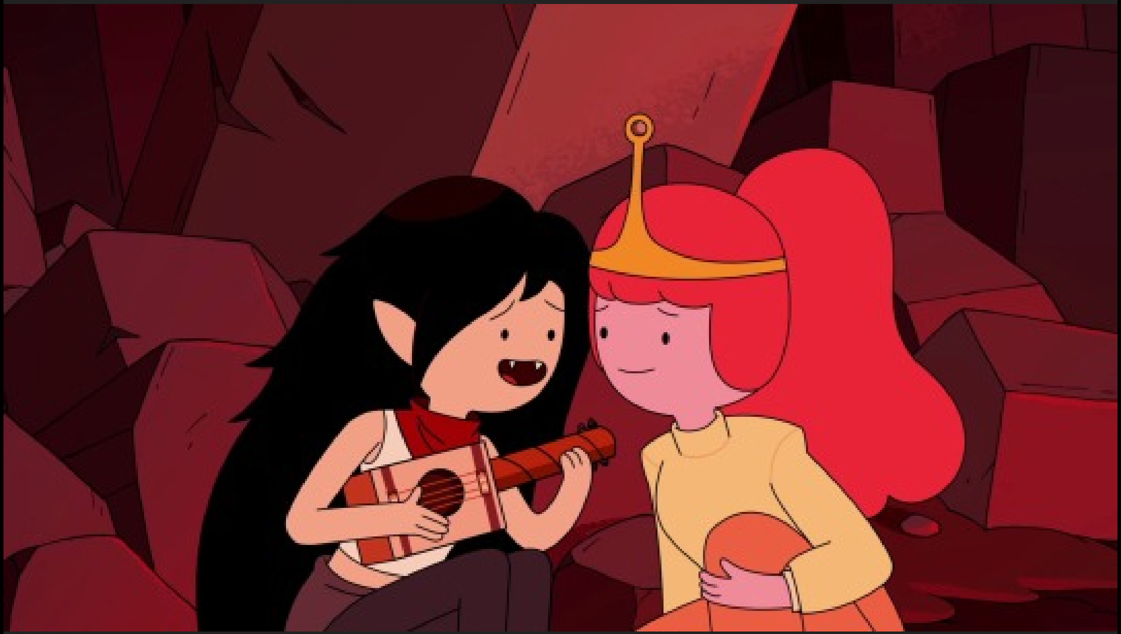
Yes, arguments will be inevitable. Yes, they will have some disagreements here and there. And that's fine. It's normal. But like Marcy said, "I could get used to this"

This.

Being honest about how you feel. Learning to trust that your partner will show you the same love and support you offer them.

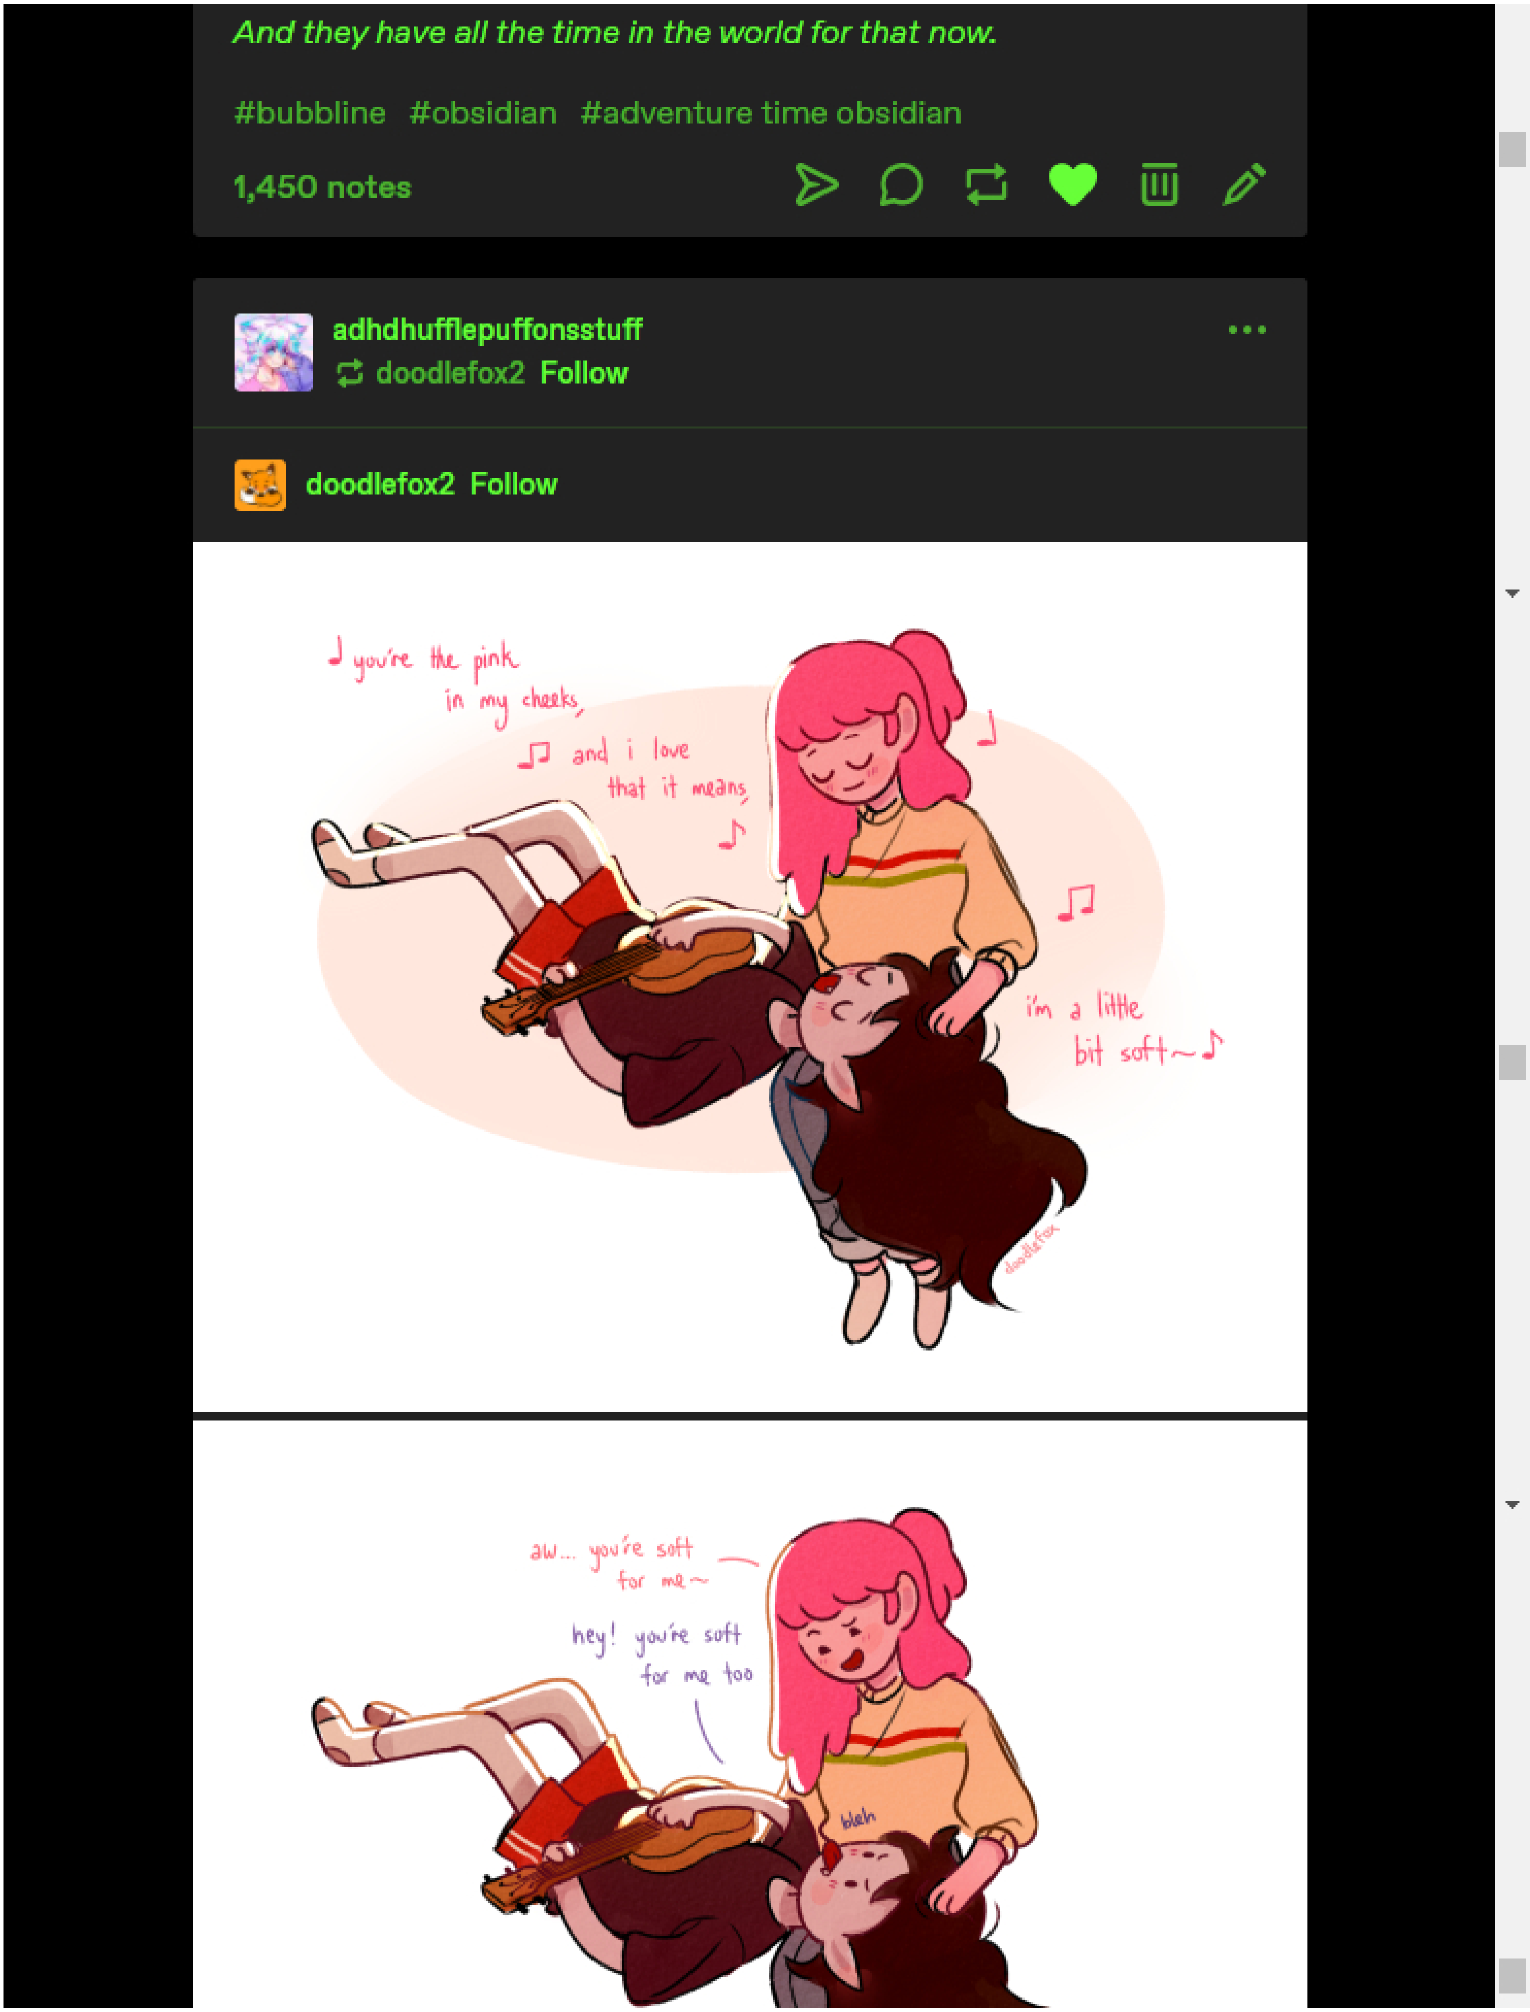


Having simple moments like these where everything is calm. Sharing breaks, knowing it's the small things that matter.



And a time when everything is falling apart, but somehow, it doesn't faze you. It's not so scary, knowing you've got each other through the good and the bad. It's not so lonely, knowing you don't have to carry everything on your shoulders.

Marcy and PB have come a long way, but still have a lot of things to learn about each other.



And they have all the time in the world for that now.

People have this weird belief that if you're critical of a system or tradition, then it must be because you failed to live up to that system or tradition. The idea of having a principled stance, regardless of whether or not you personally benefit from society accepting that stance, is foreign to so many people. And this belief is really fucking important for and beneficial to the elites of this country. If you can get the masses to equate criticizing you and the institutions you control with abject personal failure, congratulations, you've just made yourself immune to accountability

creekfiend

Also, as a failure of the education system: we need to spend more time listening to the people our systems leave behind. "Well of course you're critical of this; you failed" should not be a conversation-ender even if it is true.

Thinkin about how as kids parents told us to clean our rooms without having ever shown us how to themselves, taught us any organizational skills, spatial management, or any other knowledge necessary to know how to efficiently tackle a mess without getting overwhelmed and then got exasperated when we as ten year olds didn't just……figure it out

vampireapologist Follow

This is not a dunk on my parents for the record. I had wonderful parents growing up and still have an amazing mom. I think this is just one of those smaller and common things of parenthood that I think addressing would be monumental in reducing a very common household stressor. If parents led their children in cleanups and helped them reason out plans to manage their time and stuff, especially neurodivergent kids, the entire household would be a lot more calm, streamlined, and overall happy I think!!!

tractorgoth Follow

I've got one 7 year old perfectionist (possible ADHD) and one sweet 5 year old hurricane (DEFINITE ADHD) and me (also brain full of cats, despises prolonged supervisory things). Here's some things I've learned specific to that that are also generally good for teaching kids to clean. (Or yourself.)

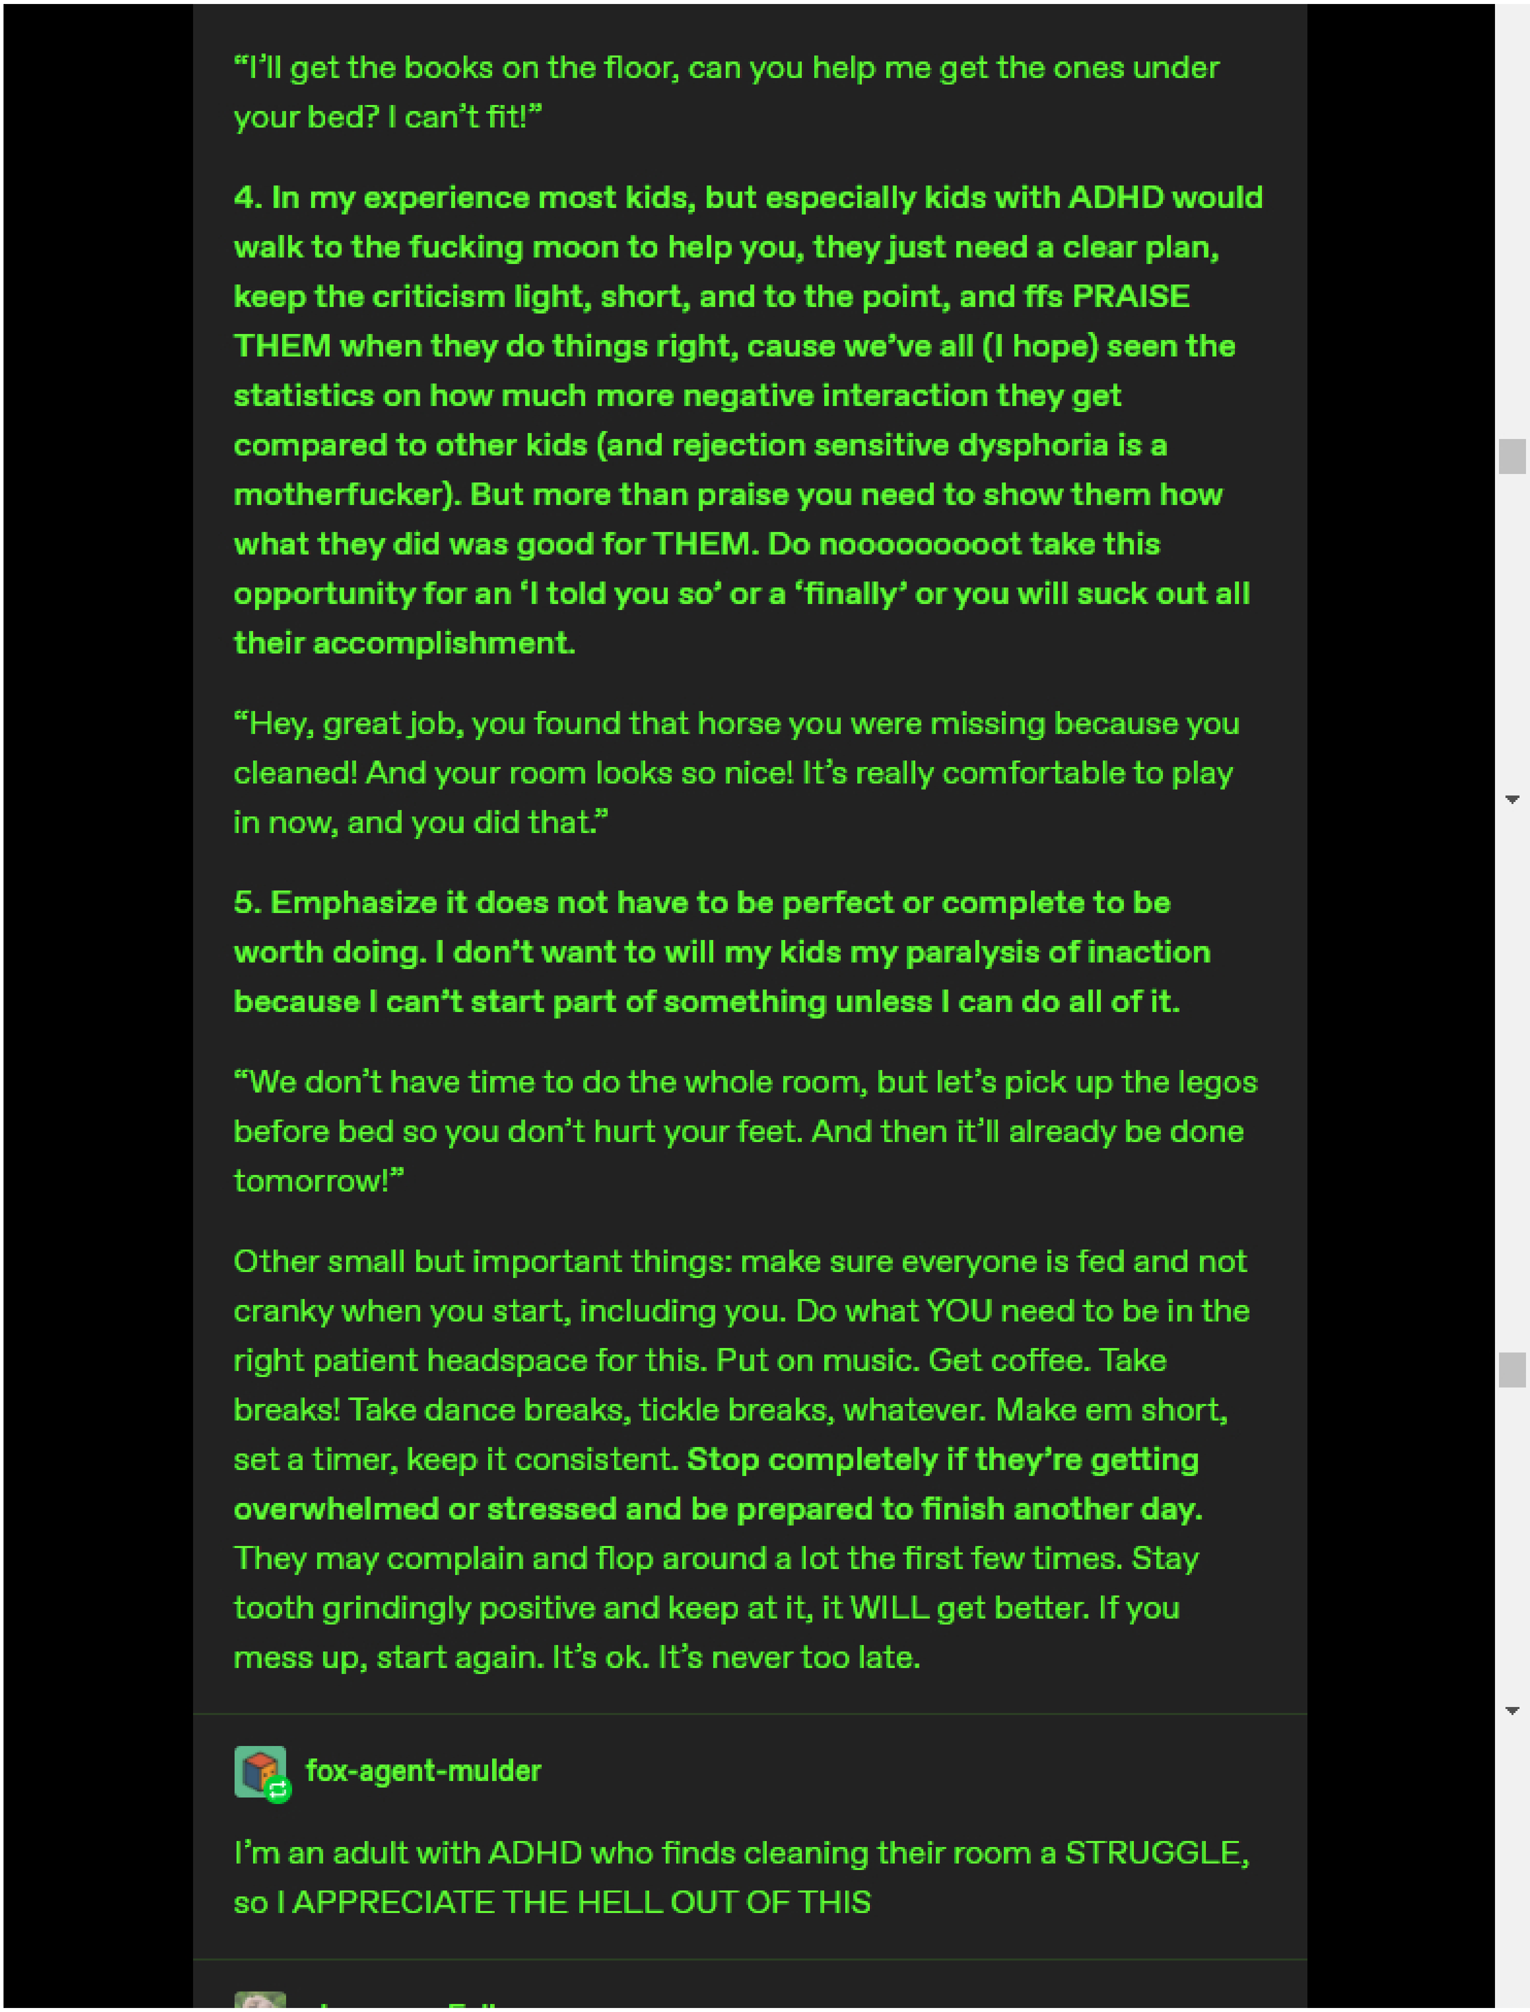
1. If you want a kid to clean, first you have to teach them to even see mess. They don't! But it does stress them out.

"Okay, let's look for something out of its place. If it's on the floor, it's out of place. If it's on your bed and it's not a blanket, it's out of place."

2. Go by category, it's easier to find stuff to put away if your search engine has a specific target, and it's more satisfying and efficient to put away a big chunk of mess at once.

"Got something? Ok, are there other things like it? Let's find all the BOOKS. I will HELP YOU."

3. Important!! Don't walk away from a kid with focus issues expecting them to instantly learn a task and finish it! You are setting them up to fail! The first several times you need to be there for the whole process and demonstrate by helping. That motivates them. They feel less panic that you'll bail and they'll be stuck alone not knowing what to do next. Narrate what you're doing, too. Help and supervise less as they seem to need you less.



"I'll get the books on the floor, can you help me get the ones under your bed? I can't fit!"

4. In my experience most kids, but especially kids with ADHD would walk to the fucking moon to help you, they just need a clear plan, keep the criticism light, short, and to the point, and ffs PRAISE THEM when they do things right, cause we've all (I hope) seen the statistics on how much more negative interaction they get compared to other kids (and rejection sensitive dysphoria is a motherfucker). But more than praise you need to show them how what they did was good for THEM. Do nooooooooot take this opportunity for an 'I told you so' or a 'finally' or you will suck out all their accomplishment.

"Hey, great job, you found that horse you were missing because you cleaned! And your room looks so nice! It's really comfortable to play in now, and you did that."

5. Emphasize it does not have to be perfect or complete to be worth doing. I don't want to will my kids my paralysis of inaction because I can't start part of something unless I can do all of it.

"We don't have time to do the whole room, but let's pick up the legos before bed so you don't hurt your feet. And then it'll already be done tomorrow!"

Other small but important things: make sure everyone is fed and not cranky when you start, including you. Do what YOU need to be in the right patient headspace for this. Put on music. Get coffee. Take breaks! Take dance breaks, tickle breaks, whatever. Make em short, set a timer, keep it consistent. Stop completely if they're getting overwhelmed or stressed and be prepared to finish another day. They may complain and flop around a lot the first few times. Stay tooth grindingly positive and keep at it, it WILL get better. If you mess up, start again. It's ok. It's never too late.

fox-agent-mulder

I'm an adult with ADHD who finds cleaning their room a STRUGGLE, so I APPRECIATE THE HELL OUT OF THIS shyocean Follow

Why are we never taught?

Why are we expected to just know?

And, for God's own sake, why were we never exposed to the idea that being good at something often happens After being bad at something and doing it imperfectly anyway?

Seriously.

frickin-adhd Follow

I teared up reading this. My mom and I "fight" over my bedroom all the time and she doesn't believe me when I tell her I want it clean too because it hasn't been clean in 16 years because all she does is tell me to clean it and get mad when it's not clean. This is so important.

psydukesheadache Follow

This! This! This!!!!

I was taught how to clean, but how my mom cleans and how I clean are completely different. I get insanely overwhelmed and feel like I need to do everything and finish everything RIGHT THAT SECOND. So, categories help and talking it out loud to myself goes a long way. I sometimes have to say, "One thing at a time and there's no rush." Less stressful! Also, organizing and creating spaces for everything is such a relief. It's the worst when you're trying to clean and have nowhere to put something, so it ends up in another random spot. Haha. Create a home for items!

Hey, so they're making a Netflix Harry Potter.

With that in mind, we're all gonna remember that JKR is a terf who has literally been cited by legislators engaged in legislation that actively harms trans people, and we're not gonna give her any more money.

That means not streaming the new show on Netflix, because regardless of how much influence she has on the production, she gets paid for it.

We're gonna make the show flop. We're gonna show Warner Brothers that we don't forget (of course, how would we forget, it isn't as if she's stopped), and that their business association with terfs is no longer profitable.

It is NOT like Lovecraft, because Lovecraft is very dead and his works are in the public domain. By consuming Lovecraft media, you are not giving any money to old Howard.

Alice has a bunch of apples. Bob borrows the apples from Alice and promises to give them back soon. Bob sells the apples for $5, then spreads a rumor that apples are actually disgusting and bad. Because of the rumor, the price of apples goes down, so Bob buys them back for $1. He gives Alice her apples back, and pockets $4 in profit.

That's how it usually works.

Say that Bob sells the apples for $5 and spreads his rumor, but Charlie decides to buy ALL the apples he can afford and spreads a different rumor that apples are actually the cure for cancer and amazing and you should definitely buy them RIGHT NOW. Suddenly, apples are worth $50! Bob still owes Alice all her apples, so he has to buy them back at this higher price, losing $45 in the process.

But Bob doesn't want to lose $45, so he borrows even more apples from Alice, so he can sell THOSE ones for $50, still in the hopes that his rumor will come out on top and the price will drop and he can buy them back and give them back to Alice and make any amount of money in profit.

Now, in the grand scheme of things, apples are just apples. Eventually, the price is going to drop, that's a given, it's just a matter of when. Bob can't keep borrowing apples forever, eventually he has to give them back. In the short term, apples are seen as the next big thing, so as more people buy them the more they're worth. This means that when Bob sells his apples in the hopes the price will go down, he's actually helping the price go up! Apples are worth $100 now, so Bob's just hoping something ELSE bad will happen to make apples worth less, but there's no guarantee if or when that will ever happen.

It's a game of chicken between Bob and Charlie to see who will blink first. Charlie bought a LOT of apples, and the price is high right now, so he could sell them for profit and be done with it, but he doesn't. He hopes the price will keep going up so he can sell them later for even MORE money! But who knows if the price will keep going up, or for how long? Maybe the prices drop and he ends up losing ALL his money because he bet it on apples and lost.

You have to wonder, why did Alice let Bob borrow her apples in the first place? Why didn't she just sell the apples herself when they were worth $5? If Bob wins, then Alice loses money. Does Alice root for Charlie now? What happens if Bob can't afford to give Alice back her apples? The price will eventually drop because, after all, these are just apples we're talking about. $100 is a lot for apples, but Bob can't afford to wait for the price to drop because Alice will send Daniel to break his kneecaps with a lead pipe in the morning. Bob is screwed.

But all of Bob's friends work in produce, borrowing and selling and buying all kinds of different fruit, and they think it's unfair that Charlie played Bob like that, so they want the owner of the store to make a new rule that says Charlie can't do that anymore AND they also want the owner to give Bob back all the money he lost, which is unfair to Charlie and everyone else who was playing along all this time. The owners of the store are friends with Bob though, so they'll probably side with him instead of Charlie and Alice because the produce market is protectionist.

detransitioning stories that don't need more publicity:

1. i detransitioned because my feelings were entirely due to internalized misogyny, and I believe that all trans people are just gnc people of their birth assigned gender who either suffer from internalized misogyny or are fetishizing women
2. i detransitioned because i was confused about my identity and I blame doctors / trans people
3. i detransitioned because transition isn't God's plan for anyone detransitioning stories that need to be boosted:

1. i detransitioned because my identity changed, and i don't regret my transition.
2. i detransitioned because i was confused about my identity, and I regret transition, but i don't blame other people for my own choices, and I don't believe that my experience is representative of most people who transition. i believe that further restrictions on who is allowed to medically transition would do more harm than good.

3. i detransitioned for my safety, because I live in a place where it's not safe for me to transition socially or medically.

terfs prey on detransitioning people. detransitioning people are at great risk of getting sucked into terf echo chambers. we trans people need to support detransitioning people because they are not our enemies. the trauma of heteronormative gender roles can be difficult to tease apart from dysphoria, and we need to be sensitive to our fellow humans who just want to feel comfortable in their skin. we need to make it okay for people to change their identities, and try out identities to see if they work.

fearmongering directed at young trans people like "make sure you're REALLY trans before you [medically] transition, because if you're not it will give you dysphoria" introduces social pressure to prove to other trans people that you're really trans, which actually increases the likelihood that a person will transition and regret it. because you're holding validation of their current identity hostage. if someone eventually detransitions, you shouldn't add to their trauma later by now giving them an inner "i told you so, you weren't really trans" voice.

You can't deserve a person's love. You'll drive yourself crazy thinking like that. They either love you, or they don't. That doesn't mean you weren't good enough for them to love you, because love isn't something you earn by being good enough. It isn't something that can be quantified or doled out. Don't blame yourself for not being loved how you need to, just teach yourself how to look for love where love lives.

mockiatoh

This isn't just about romantic love, or even skewed towards romantic love, although it does apply there too. One of the hardest things I've ever had to accept is that my mother simply wasn't someone who was capable of loving me, and there is no version of me that I could have ever been that would have earned that love. But with acceptance came healing. I was able to love myself more instead of resenting myself for not being more than any one person could be.

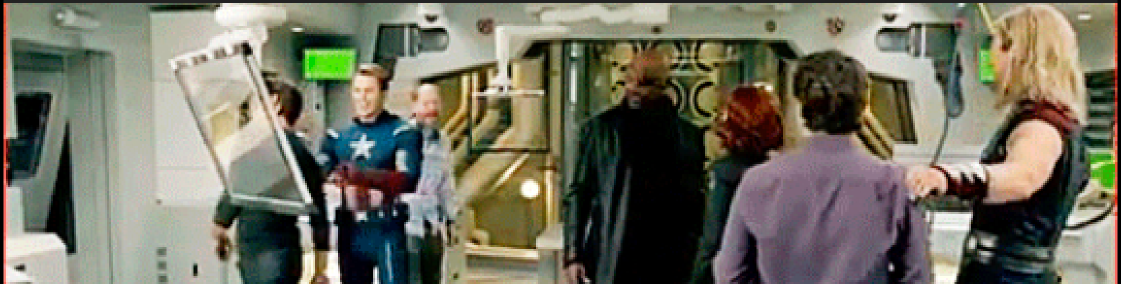
WandaVision and related Loki theories thus far:

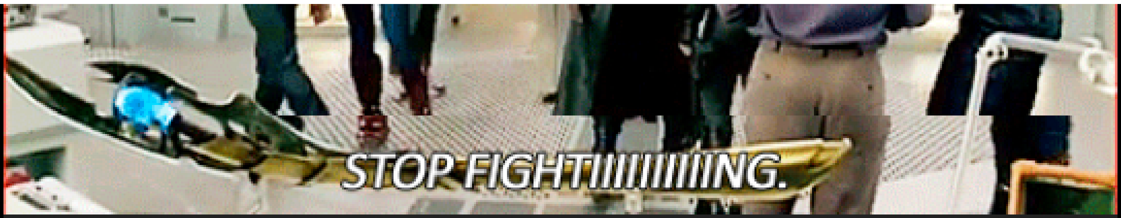
So Wanda is clearly somewhat in control of what's happening but isn't truly conscious of it. She wants to exist in this false reality and believe in it. Things that distract or pull her out of that fantasy trigger her anger and denial.

She can't be doing this all by herself because this is on a much bigger scale than the mindfuckery she's done before on Tony, etc. Something else is at play here.

Hmm, so who's been in a similar situation? Well, Loki had insecurities and desires that were twisted and used against him by Thanos; recall that the Mind Stone was inside Loki's scepter before it was inside Vision. It's been confirmed that the brainwashing power of the scepter was also used to affect him, although it had less power over him than on the humans he touched with it.

I don't subscribe to the "mind control" excuse that is given for Loki in Avengers by the fan community. Marvel has said that the Mind Stone was "influencing" him, not actually controlling him. If you remember the big team argument scene in Avengers, the scepter was in the room with everyone and messing with their thoughts and feelings, but it was only enhancing their own beliefs.





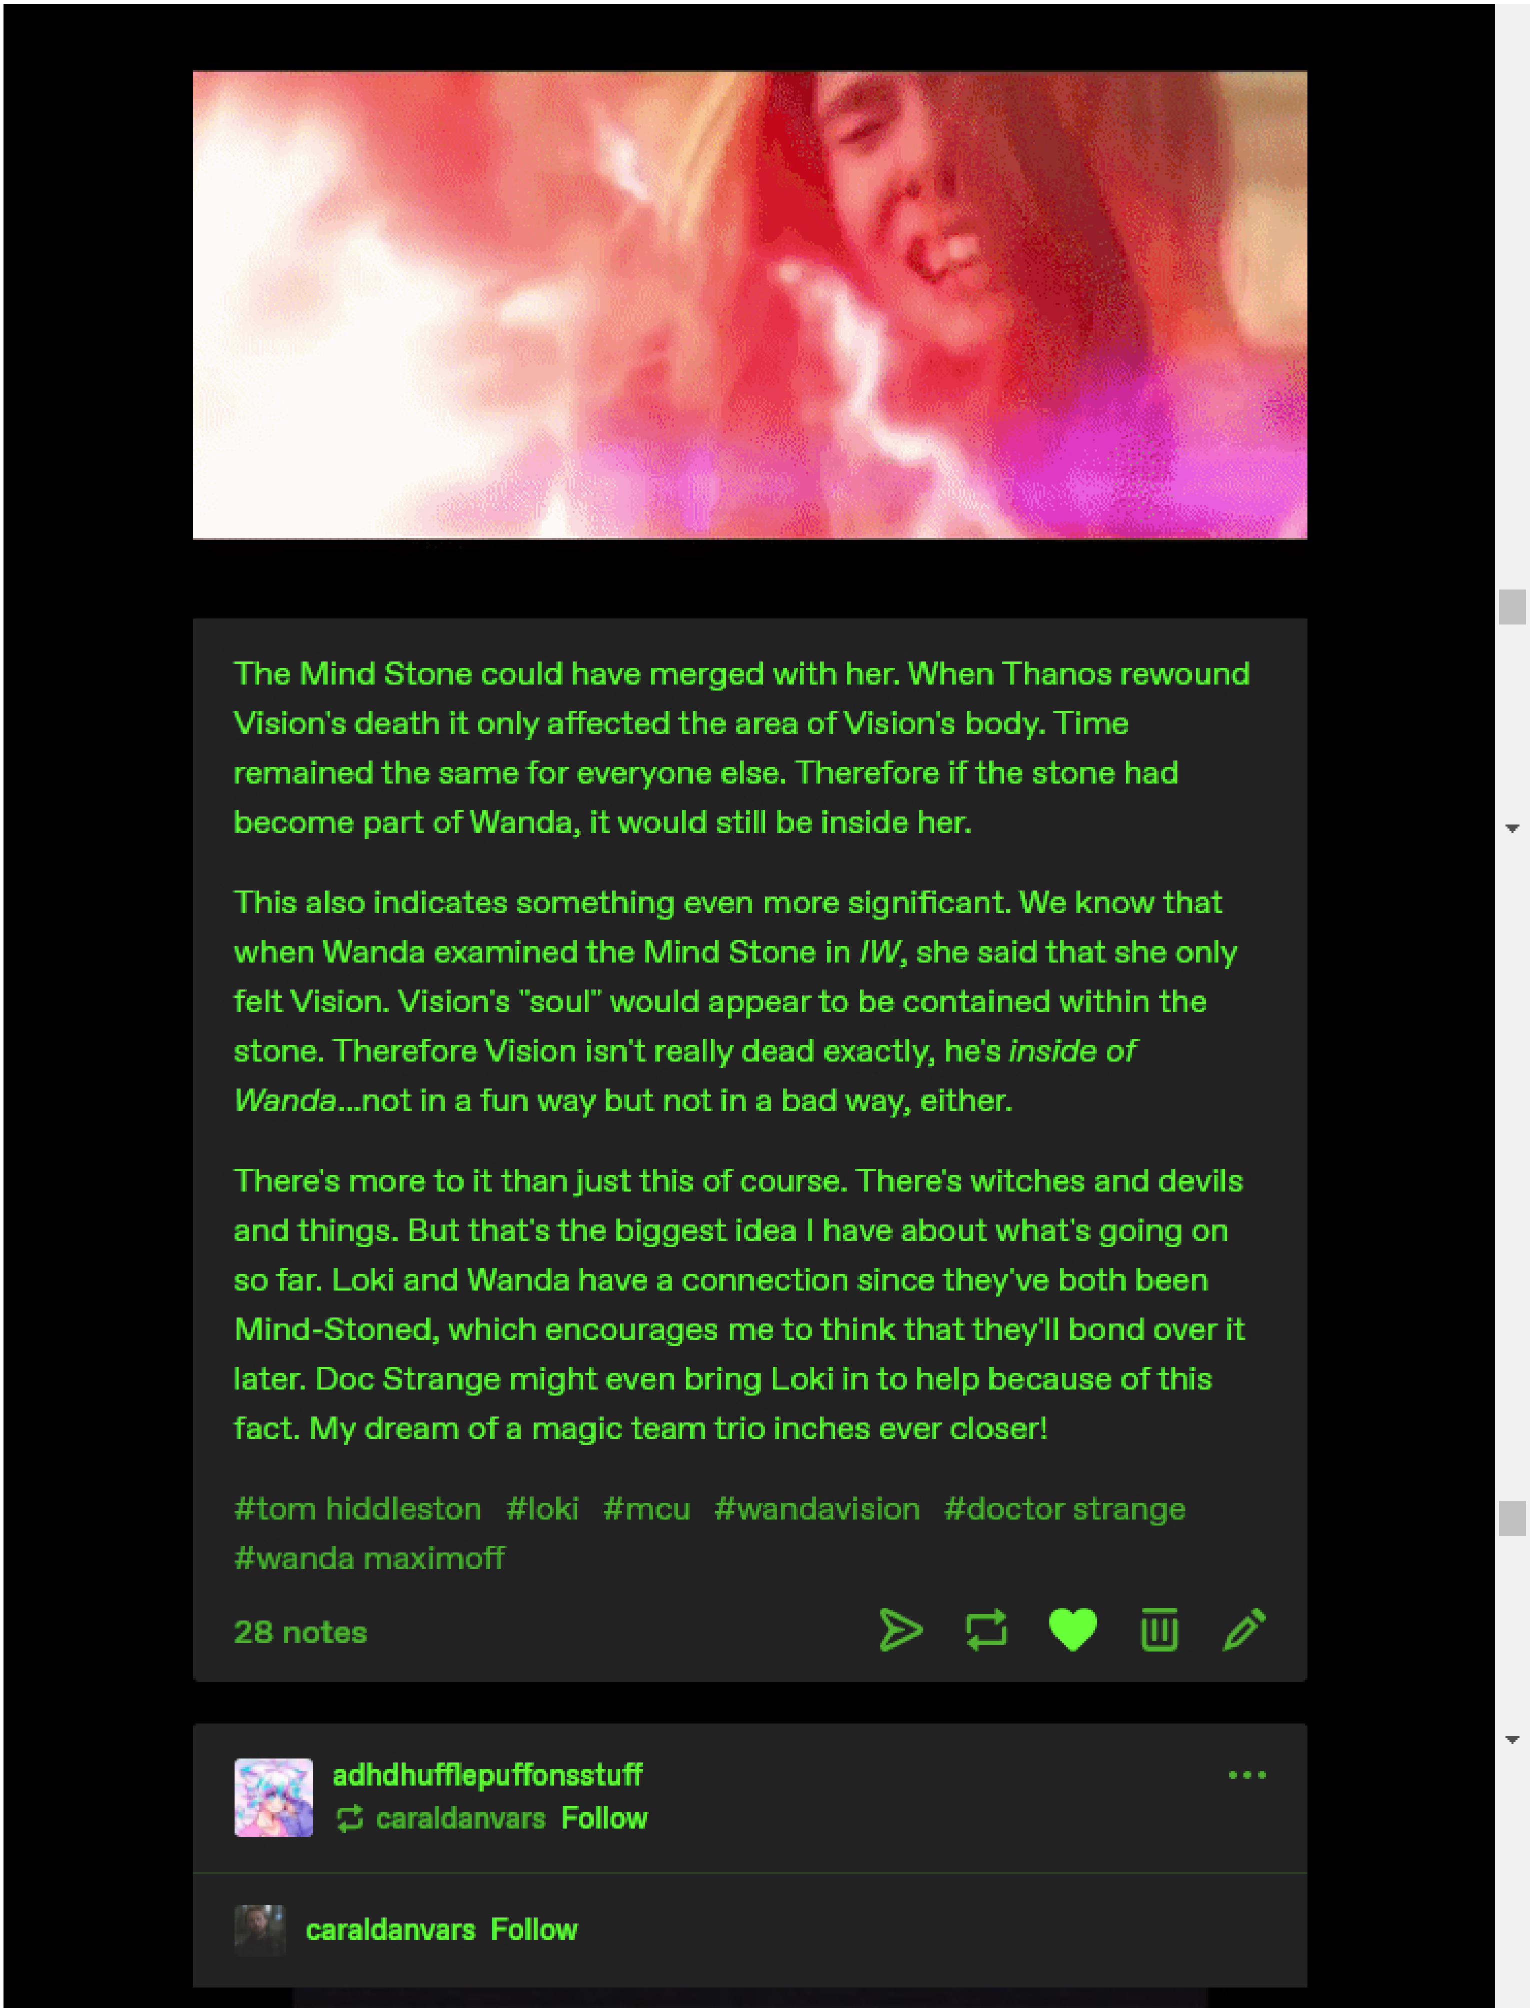
STOP FIGHTIIIIIIIIIING.

Loki's state of mind in that movie is clearly warped and he remembers things wrong, but he's still more or less himself. He wants the same things he always wants, a throne and respect (well mostly the respect, but that's a whole nother conversation). Plus by the end of the movie he's looking a lot healthier and acting less ax-crazy but is still being a little shit who knows he's in too deep now to change his mind.

But I digress. The point is, the Mind Stone could affect Wanda in the same way, too. It's even featured in the second WandaVision trailer.

In fact, it kinda looks like it's exploding in her face. Much like it did in Infinity War.

In Infinity War she was forced to kill Vision. We see the stone crack and shatter. There's no trace of anything after the explosion.



The Mind Stone could have merged with her. When Thanos rewound Vision's death it only affected the area of Vision's body. Time remained the same for everyone else. Therefore if the stone had become part of Wanda, it would still be inside her.

This also indicates something even more significant. We know that when Wanda examined the Mind Stone in IW, she said that she only felt Vision. Vision's "soul" would appear to be contained within the stone. Therefore Vision isn't really dead exactly, he's inside of Wanda...not in a fun way but not in a bad way, either.

There's more to it than just this of course. There's witches and devils and things. But that's the biggest idea I have about what's going on so far. Loki and Wanda have a connection since they've both been Mind-Stoned, which encourages me to think that they'll bond over it later. Doc Strange might even bring Loki in to help because of this fact. My dream of a magic team trio inches ever closer!

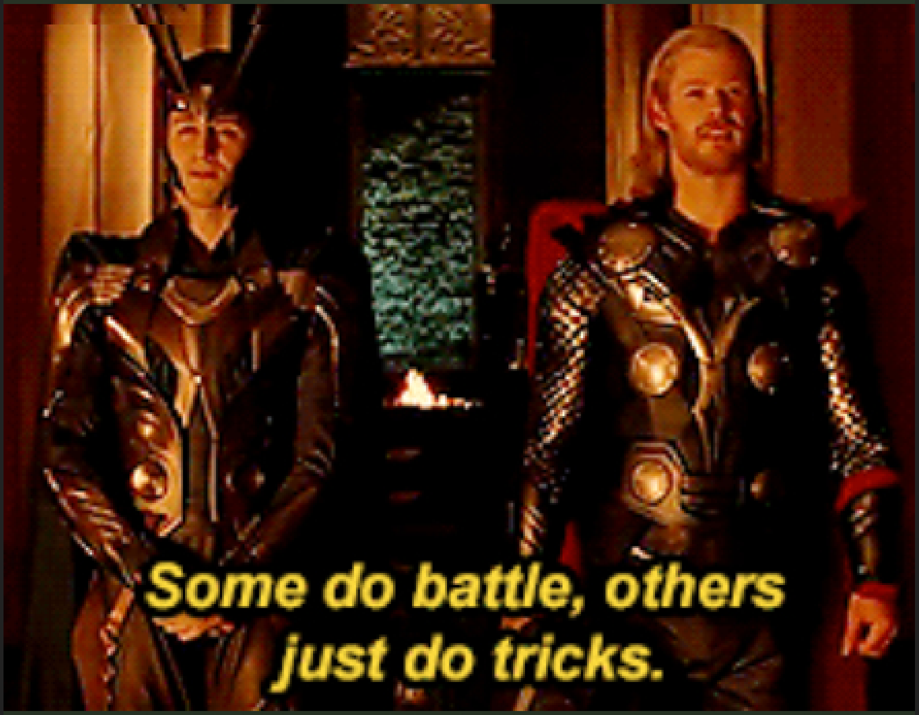
90erin asked:

Do you think Thor didn't care about Loki being a Frost Giant, because it only reaffirms Thor's belief that Loki is inherently inferior to him?

lucianalight answered:

This is such an interesting ask and I thought about it a lot. Because there isn't enough canon material for it and this issue was glossed over by the movies.

I think Thor considers Loki to be inferior because of Loki's different ways and actions. Subconsciously, this mindset, Loki being inferior to him, is originated from Odin's behavior toward Loki and the way he favors Thor. But on a conscious level, Thor thinks Loki's actions are what make him inferior. The way Loki prefers to solve things with talking, or using magic.



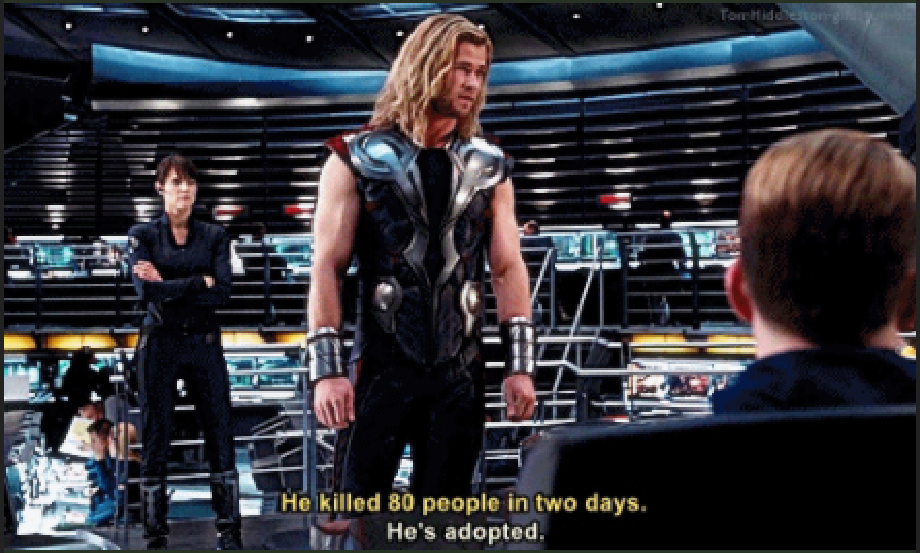
Some do battle, others just do tricks.

But the way Thor saw Jotuns is fundamentally different. He saw them as monsters, creatures bellow him who should fear him. That's a viewpoint Asgard shares too which is clear from the way Loki reacted to the truth about his race. At the end of Thor1, we see that Thor at least has learned that genocide is not OK.

FATHER! WE'LL FINISH THEM TOGETHER!

You can't kill an entire race!

But we don't know that his racist views on Jotuns has changed or not. This is not sth that a person can change overnight. It takes time, and education which Thor lacks in Asgard's racist culture(and Asgard is racist. The way Thor looked down on humans at the start of Thor1, Odin's treatment of Jane, Asgradians calling the prisoners of other races "creatures" in TDW, Frigga calling Malekith a creature, Sif refusing to call a Kree by his name in AOS and her treatment of him are all indications of Asgaridans racism). If anything, the next time someone points out Loki doing sth terrible, Thor tries to separate himself from Loki by saying that he is adopted.



He killed 80 people in two days.
He's adopted.

I know this scene is played for laughs. But that's what it implies. Thor who was defending Loki as his brother two seconds ago, now says he is adopted when Natasha points out that Loki killed 80 people in two days. Not to mention this hypocrisy comes from Thor who killed 145 Jotuns in ten minutes because his coronation was canceled and he was called a "princess", sth that wouldn't even be an insult if you're not misogynistic. And from Loki and W4 reactions we can conclude that was a normal behavior for Thor since they expected it. So what Loki did was probably one of the most Thor/Odin thing to do considering their family history in genocide and attacking other realms.

But then, we also have this line from Thor which shows he still considers Loki as his brother, no matter what his race is.

"We were raised together, we played together, we fought together. Do you remember none of that?"

However, Thor mentions their upbringing. That being raised as brothers, makes them family. He never mentions anything about Loki's race. Which brings me to my conclusion.

I think Odin and Heimdall were the ones who in their mind, connected Loki's inferiority to his race. Heimdall is probably the only person aside from Odin and Frigga who knew about Loki's true parentage. He is shown to be hostile towards Loki from the start in Thor1 without any reason, and as soon as he was able to attack Loki, he went for the kill. And Odin, wanted to "protect Loki from the truth".

You're my son. I wanted only to protect you from the truth.
What, because I'm the monster parents tell their children about at night?

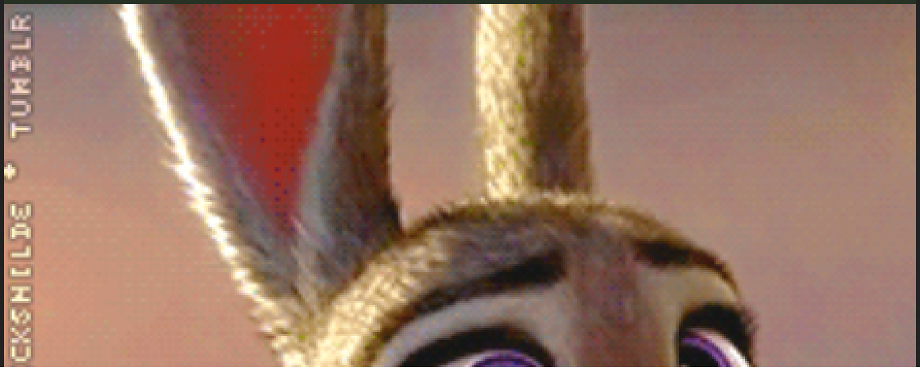
Which implies that in his mind being Jotun is so horrible that someone needs to be protected from that knowledge about their own race! We later see how this mindset shows itself in Loki's trial(the picture is from Thor The Dark World Prelude comic which is an official tie-in to MCU). He calls Loki Laufeyson a creature he doesn't recognize.

I REALLY DON'T SEE WHAT ALL THE FUSS IS ABOUT.
I INTENDED TO RULE EARTH WITH THE SAME FIRM HAND WITH WHICH YOU RULE ALL THE NINE REALMS.
TO SHOW HUMANITY THE SAME MERCY YOU'VE GRANTED YOUR OPPONENTS.
AND IF GIVEN THE CHANCE, I MIGHT HAVE EVEN STOLEN A MORTAL INFANT AND RAISED IT AS MY OWN.
FRIGGA CLINGS TO YOU LIKE THE MOTHER OF A DROWNED CHILD, BUT SHE IS TOO LATE TO SAVE YOU.
THE BOY I KNEW IS DEAD. WHAT REMAINS IS A CREATURE I DO NOT RECOGNIZE.
FRIGGA IS WHY YOU STILL LIVE, BUT THIS WAS THE LAST TIME YOU WILL EVER SEE HER.
SPEND THE REST OF YOUR WICKED DAYS IN THE DUNGEONS...
...LOKI LAUFEYSON.

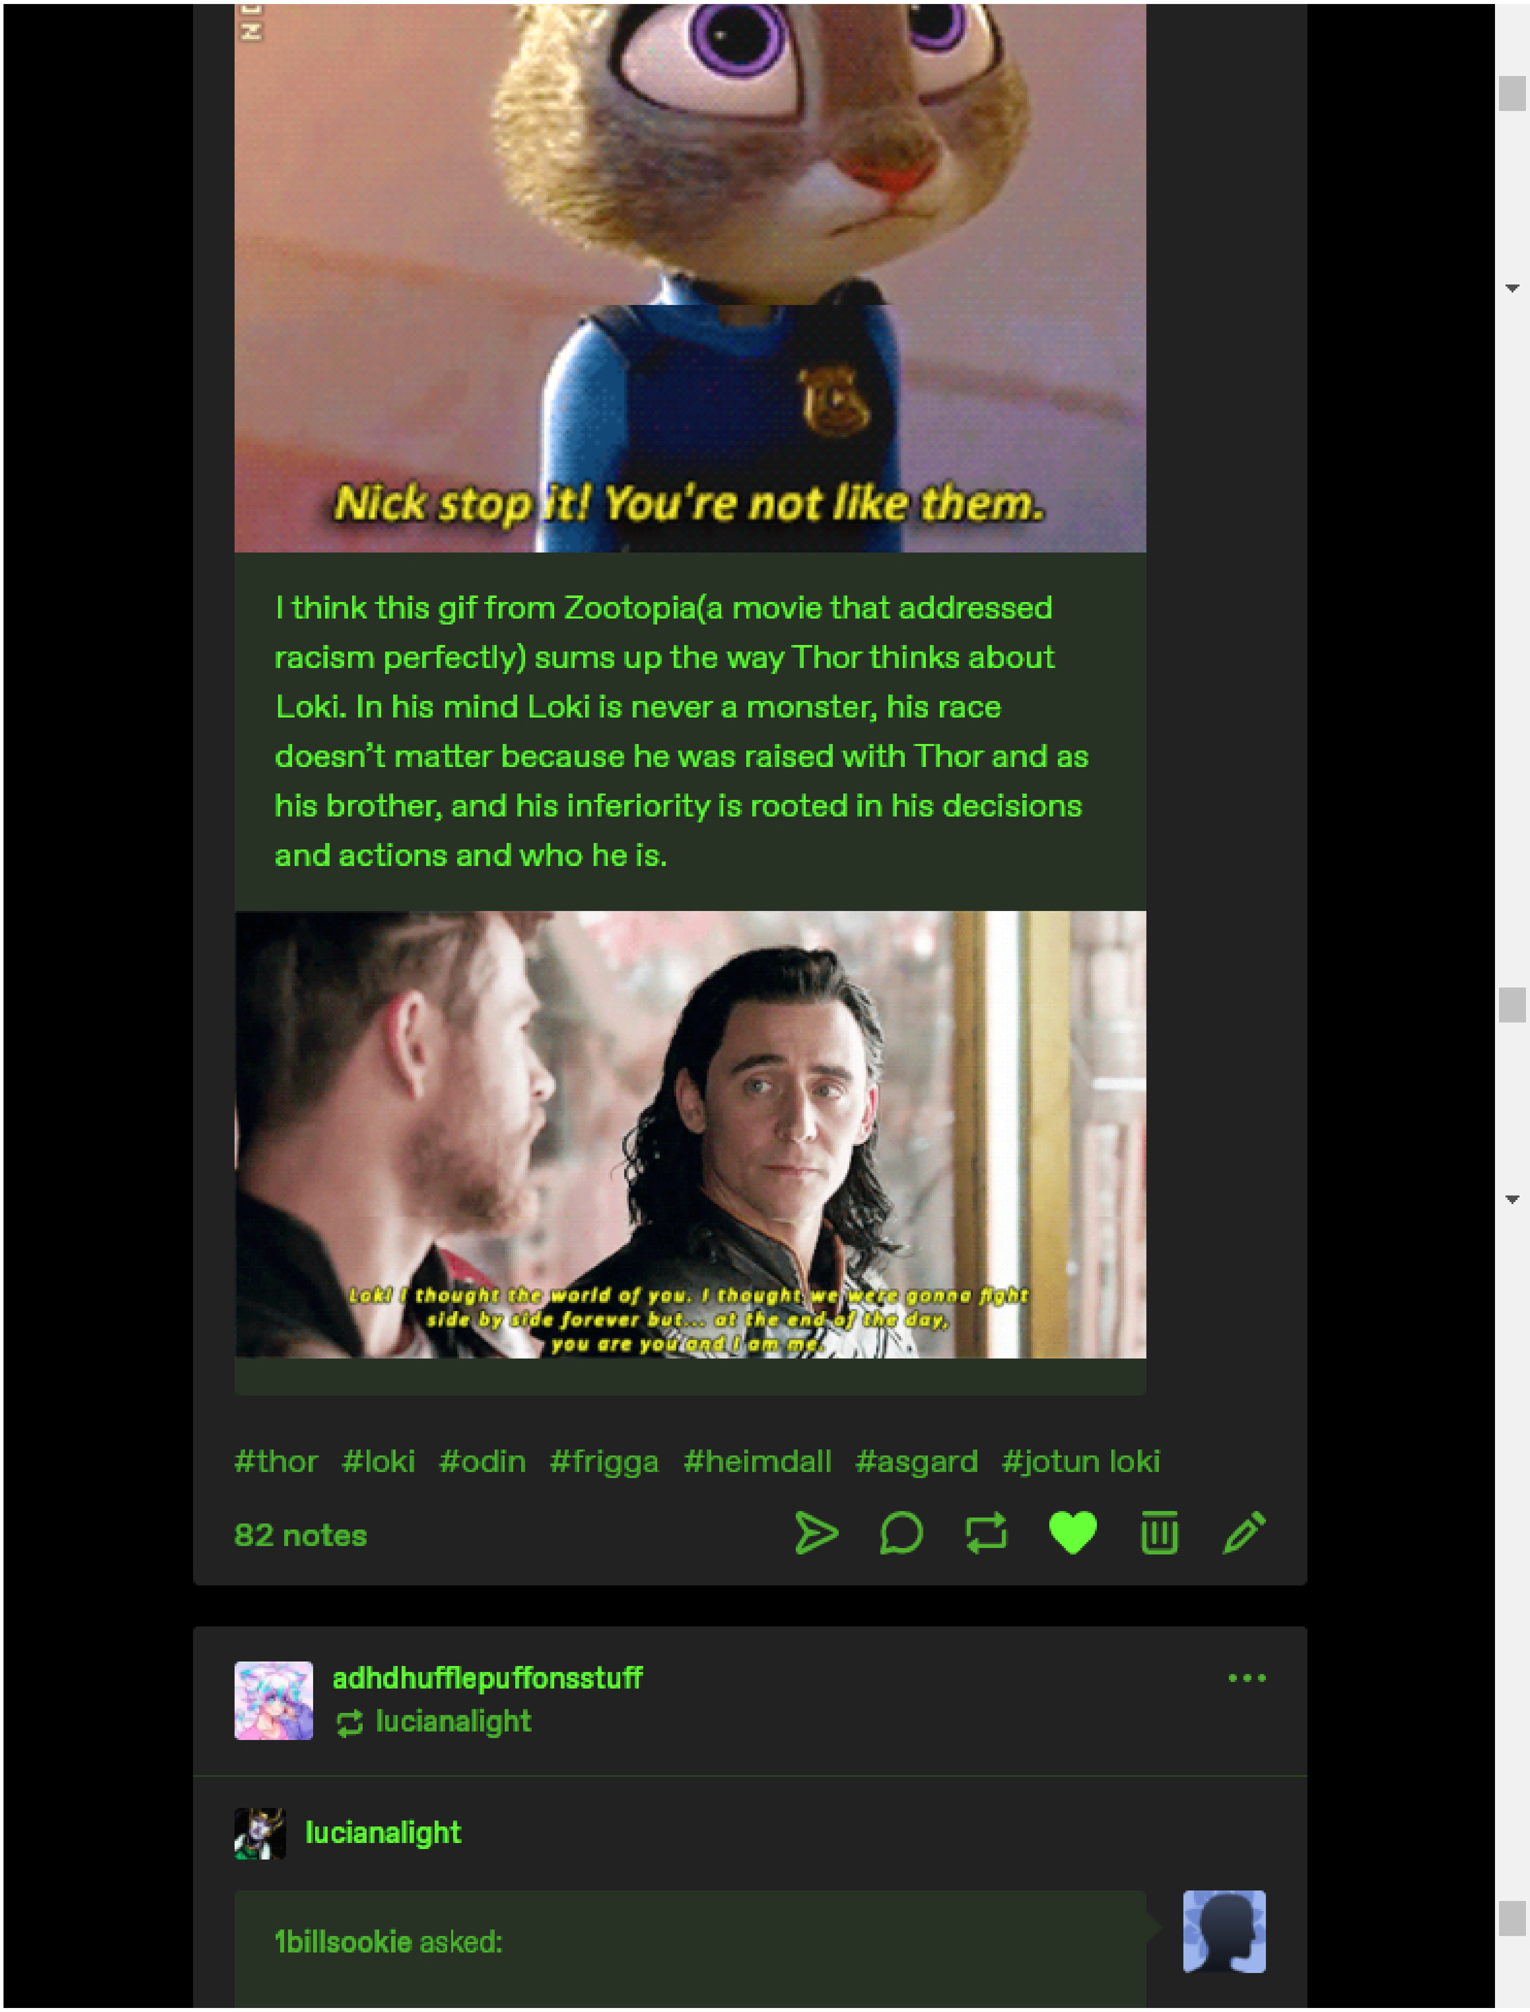
I think Thor's viewpoint about Loki's race, is closer to Frigga.

"He kept the truth from you so you would never feel different. You are our son, Loki, and we your family."

That he is no different because he is family. Or more accurately, I think Thor views Loki as being different from other Jotuns.



CKSHILDE • TUMBLR



Nick stop it! You're not like them.

I think this gif from Zootopia(a movie that addressed racism perfectly) sums up the way Thor thinks about Loki. In his mind Loki is never a monster, his race doesn't matter because he was raised with Thor and as his brother, and his inferiority is rooted in his decisions and actions and who he is.

Loki I thought the world of you. I thought we were gonna fight side by side forever but... at the end of the day, you are you and I am me.

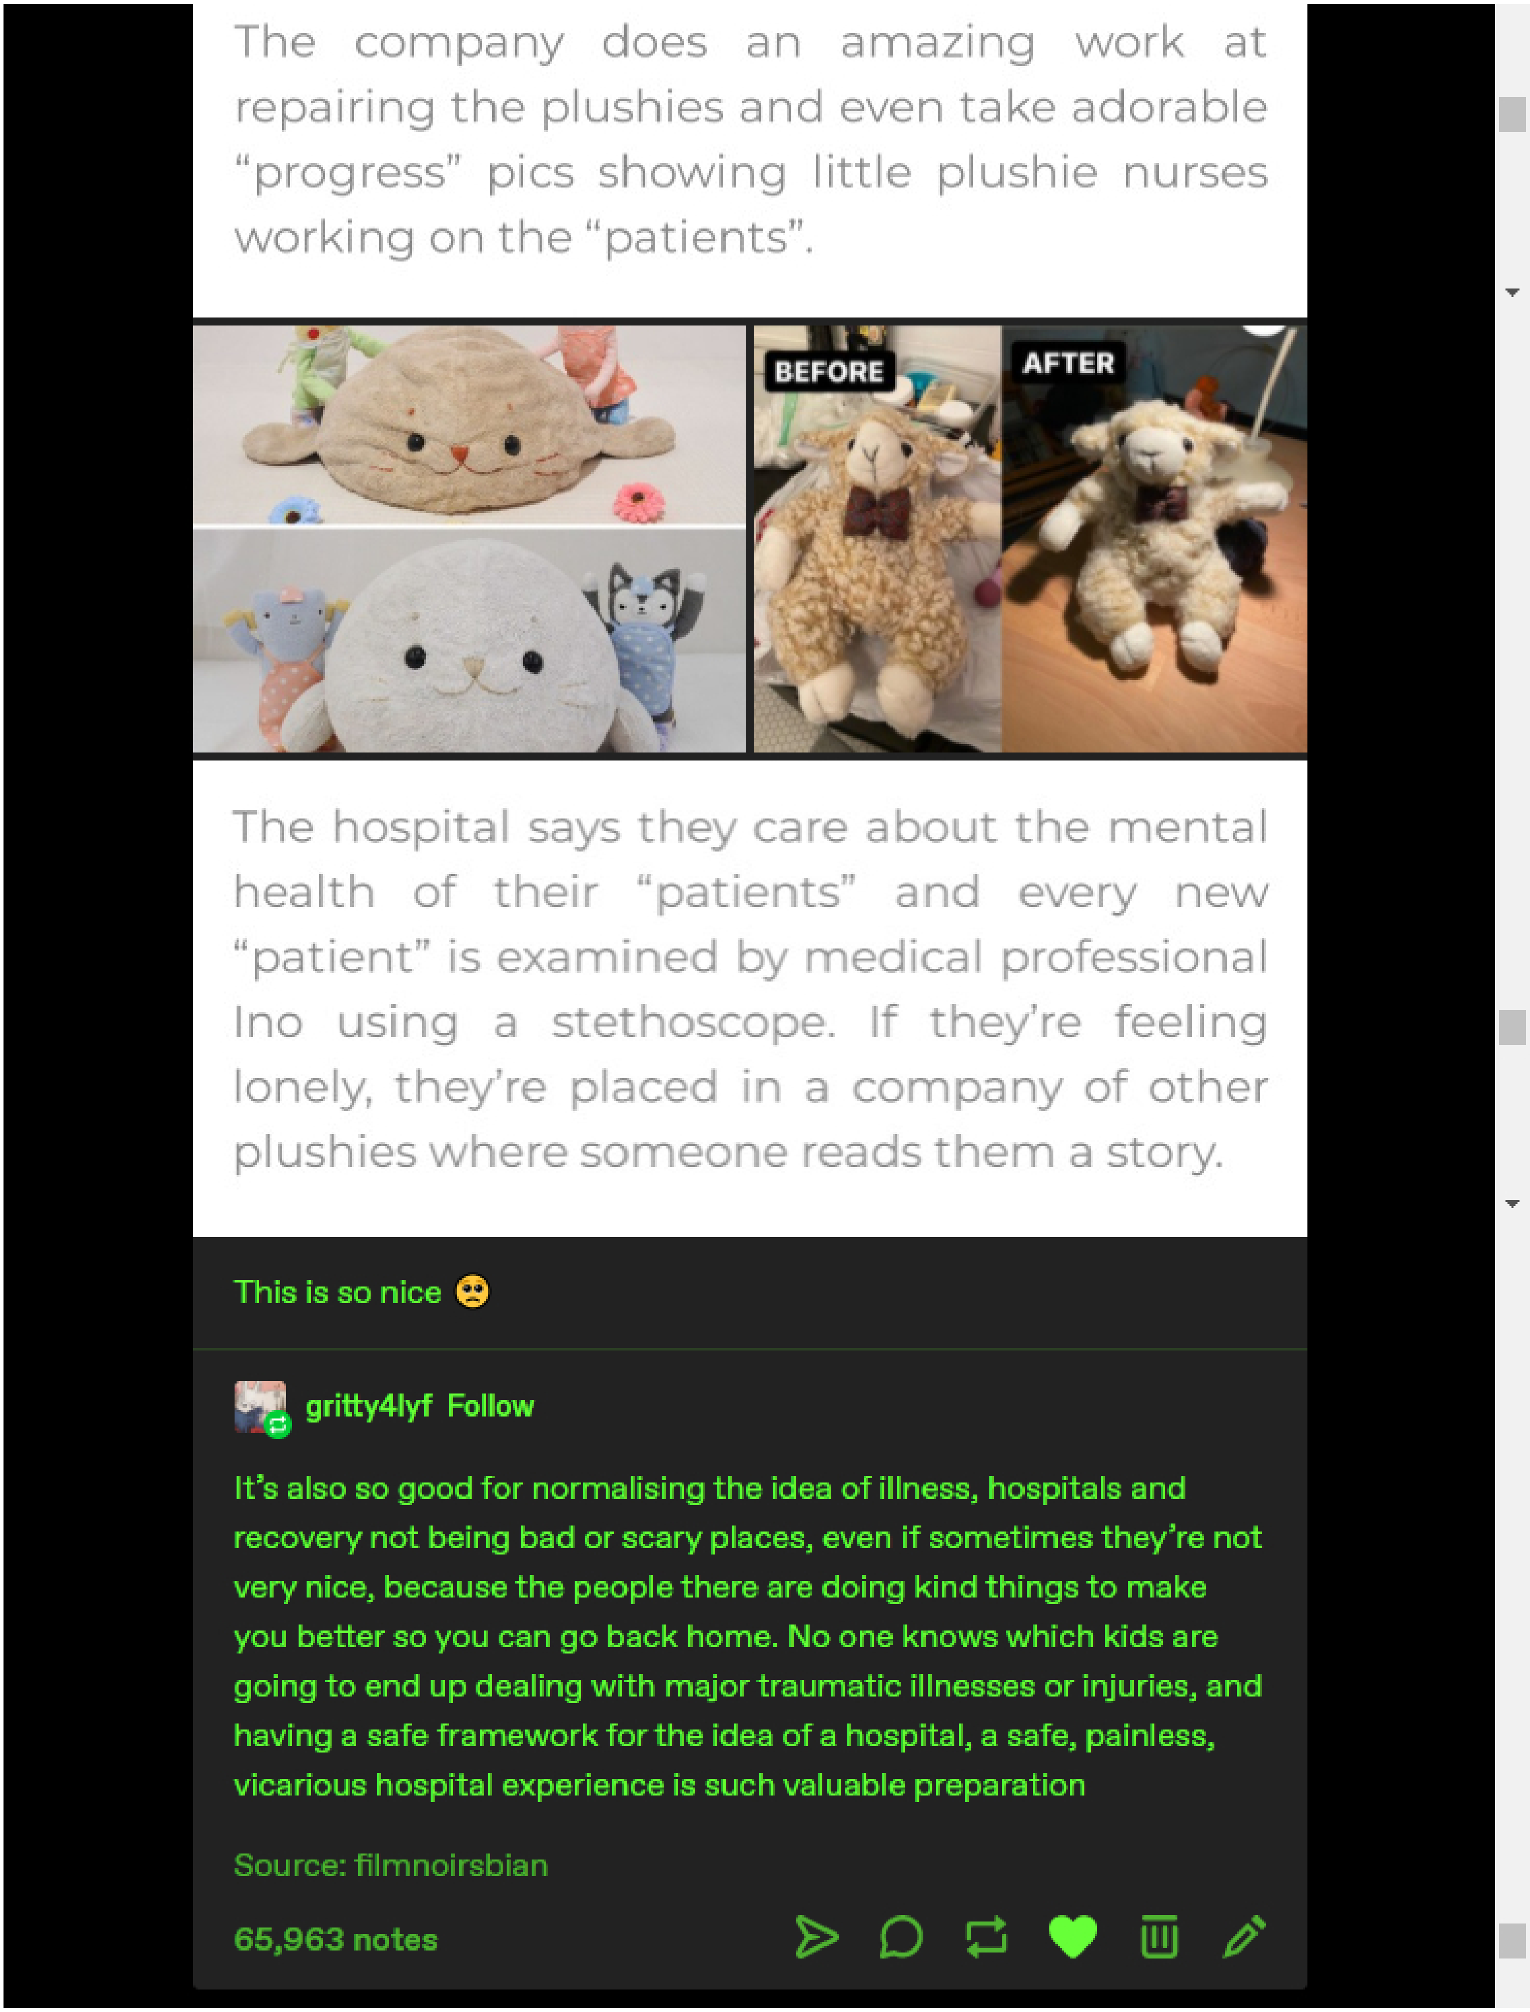
I think toy doctors are so nice actually like i remember being a little heartbroken kid when one of my beloved stuffed animals got old and torn up and my mom just threw him out. And i know what it would have meant to me, to have someone lovingly stitch him back up instead so i could love him just a little longer. And I'm really glad there are little kids out there who get to see pictures of their stuffed animals and dolls with little fake hospital beds and casts as they "rest & heal" before returning to them good as new. Like what a sweet thing to do with your life.

filmnoirsbian Follow



The company does an amazing work at repairing the plushies and even take adorable "progress" pics showing little plushie nurses working on the "patients".

The hospital says they care about the mental health of their "patients" and every new "patient" is examined by medical professional Ino using a stethoscope. If they're feeling lonely, they're placed in a company of other plushies where someone reads them a story.

This is so nice 🥺

gritty4lyf Follow

It's also so good for normalising the idea of illness, hospitals and recovery not being bad or scary places, even if sometimes they're not very nice, because the people there are doing kind things to make you better so you can go back home. No one knows which kids are going to end up dealing with major traumatic illnesses or injuries, and having a safe framework for the idea of a hospital, a safe, painless, vicarious hospital experience is such valuable preparation @Jojoidk _ oh wow i didnt think people would actually read that lmao ok so. i was a very critical-minded child and i went to sunday school where id be constantly grounded and shunned by the "teachers" for asking too many "blasphemous" questions. like: if god is both all-loving and all-mighty why did he genocide the entire planet? why did he say to moses that he would "harden" pharaoh's heart so he can unleash the plagues and KILL BABIES when the bible keeps saying god loves kids so much? etc etc. so one day i got tired and wrote a "manifesto" for my sunday school classmates. it listed (copied directly from my bible) all the awful things god had done and ended with "maybe, since god is clearly the villain here, we should consider satan'a point of view". i signed it myself under the "by signing this document i declare that i am against the dictator that calls himself god" mention (or something like that).

himself god" mention (or something like that).

then i tried to have my classmates sign it too when the "teacher" arrived and saw it and shrieked. she grabbed me by the arm and went to fetch the priest who took me to the cellar (nothing creepy tho) and like, sat me down while he was throwing holy water at me and saying things like "jesus christ our lord and savior, help this lost sheep find her way to your path again". i wasnt very impressed tbh i just wanted to laugh. then he started saying things in latin and eventually made me leave after recommending i didnt tell my parents all this. but tbh it wasnt a "real" exorcism, i just think it was because the priest came from a background where demonic possession and exorcism are more frequent! so yeah i kinda got exorcised at 7 for SPEAKING THE TRUTH some info about norther ireland:

- Northern Ireland has one gender clinic. For the WHOLE country
- the waiting list is absurdly long and they're currently not even taking referrals
- the adolescent gender identity service was disbanded because the one person in charge of it left
